The exodus from the metropolis mentioned in my last continues and will continue for some time yet, but still the city does not seem to thin out perceptibly. For one thing New York is too large to show the absence of the comparatively few thousand who can afford the regular begin, and for another the places of those thus temporarily gone is filled, also temporarily, by the large number of strangers which are brought hither by Centennial and other attractions. The amount of summer travel to this city this year would be surprising in view of the universal hard times, were it not for the extraordinarily low rates that prevail upon all the trunk lines. The reduction recently made did not, it is needless to say, originate in the disinterested benevolence of the various corporations, but are merely a part of their annual illustration of the old saying about biting one's own nose off to spite one's neighbor. The result is loss to the railroads, but it's an ill wind that blows nobody good, and the compensating advantage in this case is that the public can now travel about as cheaply as they can live at home. One can go from here to Niagara Falls and back for $9, while the fare to Chicago is $16, to the Mississippi $23, to the Missouri $30, and to the Pacific $125. Further reductions are perhaps yet in store. Now is the time, therefore, for your readers to visit their friends or relatives, and take in New York and the Exposition at the same time.

PHILADELPHIA, June 17.

The weather though still warm, has been vastly more comfortable this week than last, we having had several days when constant clouds restrained the ardor of the sun and occasional showers diffused a delightful coolness.

Every inch of ground from the dusky little dell first traversed as one enters from the Reading railway station, where the sun scarcely penetrates the luxuriant foliage and where red bird notes and the trickling of water are often the only sounds heard among its cool shadows, over to the grassy slope at the opposite limit where white tents and jaring scenes suggest widely different thoughts all is fascinating variety. There is hardly a nationality, an age, a temperament, or a mood among men that cannot here find something to harmonize with its own condition and delight its taste, and it seems to me that any man in this country who has it in his power to enjoy the expansion of mind and the increase of knowledge which the study of this microcosm—this condensation of the great world affords, is guilty of a crime toward himself.

Another interesting publication at the pavilion, and one that serves as a sort of index to the whole, is Howell & Cox's Centennial Item, giving all imaginable newspapers statistics and sketches of the most popular journals of the country; giving their histories and entertaining accounts of their inside workings. One of these latter articles has for its subject the New York Ledger, and is especially. Probably but a very small proportion of the millions who have read this unrivaled family paper during the past twenty years are aware that it was born into the world a dry, business-like commercial journal, but such is the fact, as its name indicates, and it history is to be relied on, a very feeble and weak-kneed publication it was until Robert Bonner took it in hand, changed its character and, to use his own expression, "set himself to the task of making it the best and best known family paper in America. He might as well have said 'in the world,' for hardly two years had passed before he had accomplished his object and a good deal more, without, however, causing him to abate one jot of his efforts toward improvement. His whole course has been characterized by an insatiable but legitimate and perfectly controlled ambition. For years after the paper had begun to pay handsomely its profits were constantly expended upon its own improvement, and thus Mr. Bonner's invariable rule became firmly established that everything which the Ledger wants or which will in any degree increase its attractiveness or usefulness it must have. Nothing is too costly for it; nothing too difficult of attainment. The result is as every observer knows, that this paper has had for two decades the largest and most brilliant corps of contributors ever attached to any journal. The New York Ledger to-day is better than ever before, for the

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon those various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark colored vitiated matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus preserved.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and inveterate cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons employed in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Typo-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuge, no anthelmintic will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores, cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

MAGNETIC OINTMENT

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing diseases is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of those powerful Vegetable Extracts with Rosemary or Sagacious in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and thorough investigation of its properties.

As a liver pills, while these remains subject to its action, a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, and muscle, and nerve and ligament is searched out, and every particle of its purifying and healing influence. Disease is rooted up readily with unusual ease and certainty.

Nervous diseases are on record when this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this ointment is the most complete remedy ever created. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Disorded Kidneys, Female Weakness, Piles, Cramps, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face, Sick Headache, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Sore Throat, Sores, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. The Most Remarkable Suicide on Record.

ON Saturday morning a gentleman named James A. Moon, who resides on a farm near the Farmers' Institute, in Union township, nine miles south of the city, registered at the Lake House, and was assigned to room No. 41, on the third floor. In asking for a room he said he wanted one in the rear of the house, abutting on the alley if possible. No especial attention was paid to the new guest at the house, except that the porters complained that his baggage was very heavy, and they had some difficulty in getting it to his room. The man went in and out the same as other guests, but on one occasion he remarked to Mr. Weekley, one of the landlords, that he was engaged in perfecting a patent of considerable importance. Several times yesterday the housekeeper tried the door of No. 41, for the purpose of having it cleaned up, but each time found it locked. About five o'clock in the evening, finding the door still locked, she went through the adjoining room, No. 40, which opens into No. 41, and there saw what she supposed was the dead body of a man lying upon the floor. She gave the alarm, and the first persons to arrive upon the scene were Mr. Lance, a traveling man for a Cincinnati drug house, and Henry C. Timoey, of our city, who was visiting him. These gentlemen went to the room, and were soon thoroughly found in the presence of a man with his head completely severed from his body—cut as clean as one would a chicken's with an axe. The decapitation, as they found it, was bad enough, but the appliances which had been used to produce death were most wonderful, and will stand in the history of suicide as unique and unparalled. We shall attempt to describe them. In the first place there was a beam, or more properly a lever, about one inch long, made up of three sections, each a little over two feet long, and fastened together with strong iron bolts. The base of this lever was composed of two pieces of iron, one inch thick and six wide, spread perhaps six inches apart. The next section was also composed of two pieces of the same size, but considerably lighter, and fastened together. The last section was a single piece of the same size. At the small or upper end of the lever or beam were bolted horizontally two pieces of iron, one inch thick, three inches wide and fifteen inches long. At the lower end of these pieces of iron a heavy axe was bolted, whose bit or cutting edge was twelve inches wide. The two pieces of iron and the axe are estimated to weigh at least forty pounds. The other or butt-end of the beam was fastened to the floor by means of cross-pieces, with heavy iron door-hinges, securely screwed down. On the west side of the room a heavy bracket was secured to the wall, with a shelf upon which a combustible was found. Just above the upper end of the beam a cord was run to a hook in the bracket—the beam being raised about six feet high and secured in that position by the cord to the hook in the wall. Where the cord was fastened at the wall on the bracket it was doubled and a candle inserted between the strands, so that when the candle burned down sufficiently the two strands would come together and the cord be burned in two. This was the means adopted to insure the falling of the engine of destruction. Right under where the ax would fall a soap-box was secured, screwed to the wall and floor, with the opening outward into the room, so arranged that the ax would come down in front of the box, the upper edge being bevelled to secure a straight stroke from the implement. The ax, the irons in which it was clamped, and the timbers in the beam all probably altogether weigh a hundred or more pounds, to say nothing of the force of the fall, a distance of six feet or more. After arranging the above machinery, the man had himself down upon the floor at right angles with the western guillotine, buckled a strap around his thighs, which was screwed down to the floor, buckled another around his body, which was similarly secured to the floor, put both his hands back of his neck—saying, of course, upon his back—and placed his head inside the box above mentioned. The box was filled with cotton batting, saturated with chloroform. To keep the chin out of the way loops were made in each side of the box, and a wooden rod ran through, upon which the chin rested. It is supposed that having his machinery arranged to his satisfaction he lit the candle lighted, the suicide had himself upon the floor arranged the straps, applied the chloroform to the cotton, placed his head in the box, and calmly slept until the ax descended. To accommodate his neck three narrow strips were screwed to the floor, which operated the same as a pillow, and gave a good foundation for the ax to fall into. When the candle burned down sufficiently the cord was burned off and the ax fell, completely severing the head from the body—making a clean job of it. The head remained in the box, while the blood flowed out upon the floor and accumulated in a great pool. The room is narrow, and half the man's body lay under the bed. The physicians say that death must have ensued some time during the afternoon, as no signs of decay were visible, which generally happens very quickly in this hot weather. The bed in the room had not been disturbed, and it is probable that he spent the night in perfecting his machinery of death. Not a nail was used, everything being put together with bolts and screws. To make sure against the possibility of the candle going out, a large piece of brown paper was fastened up against the transom leading into room No. 40. The lumber of which the machinery was made, together with the bolts and screws, were undoubtedly brought to the hotel in his trunk.

As soon as the discovery was made the Coroner impaneled a jury, which proceeded to investigate the case. After sitting until ten o'clock last night, the jurors adjourned until half past eight o'clock this morning. The trunk of the deceased was examined, but in it nothing was found except his boots, vest, coat, a brace and three bits, a screw-driver, a wrench, some screws and a few pieces of boards. Upon his person were a pocket-book, containing a few dollars in money, and some private papers, but nothing showing why he committed his singular self-murder.

MR. Moon was well known in this city. He owned a fine farm near the Farmers' Institute, and leaves a wife and four children. He served with Capt. Haggard in the Sixteenth Indiana Battery during the war, and was a gallant soldier. Upon his farm he had a blacksmith, wagon and carpenter shop, and was considered a mechanical genius, though he never learned any trade—a sort of "jack of trades and good at none."—Lafayette (Ind.) Journal, June 12.

"The Rainbow in the Bubble."

CHEERFULNESS is to the mind what sunshine is to the earth—its rejuvenating force. The cheerful people are always healthful people, with clear eyes, clear vision, or wrinkled their faces. Nay, cheerfulness will keep gray hairs and wrinkles at bay more effectually than any cosmetic or magic wash. The mind upon which attracts affection and regard to those who wear it. The cheerful person is the welcome and welcome at all times and in all places. She lights up the darkest day, and has the same genial and stimulating effect as the sunbeam; she makes the best of every thing—even misfortune seen through her spectacles does not look so ugly; she anticipates happiness ahead, and if she hasn't got it she makes believe she has, and so she comes to it after a while. She sees the silver lining of every cloud, and the first rift, where no other mortal sees any, and looks up at the bright side of every thing. She does not make faces over a sour dinner or a hard bed, but resigns herself to inconveniences so cheerfully that one might be deceived into thinking her accustomed to them. That she is a most companionable person goes without saying, for who but her humorous self can be such good company to herself? Her examples is infectious, and we find ourselves looking at things in her way, as though we peeped by the light of her countenance. It "good nature is stronger than tombstones," as the sage tells us, then cheerfulness is the key to it. With many of us, perhaps, cheerfulness is no more a virtue for which we are responsible than a goddess for genius, which is born in the Grecian profile, or a fine head of hair is bred in the bone with a few of us, just as a talent for carpentry, for sculpturing, for painting, or for play her some compliments. And now you'd better take it like up, for Madame Owl only receives company at night, and I'm afraid you haven't been awake when it becomes dark unless you do."

So Mrs. Swallow, like an obedient wife and mother, did as she was told; when Mr. Swallow woke him. "He'd only been thinking."

A few moments after, away they flew to the old oak-tree where Madam Owl lived.

She had just supped off a plump young field-mouse and was very good-natured, and listened with the utmost patience until they had told their story. Then she said:

"To which to whom! oh! oh! yes!"

"Wasn't it too bad of the Wind?" asked Mrs. Swallow.

"To which to whom! oh! oh! yes!" answered the Owl.

"Can you tell us what to do?" asked Mr. Swallow.

Madam Owl looked at the moon half an hour—looked at the stars half an hour—looked at nothing half an hour—and then said very slowly: "To which to whom! oh! oh! no-no."

"Good night," twittered the angry swallows, and flew quickly back to their chimney again.

"Much good it did us going to Madam Owl," said Mrs. Swallow, with a pout, as soon as they reached home. "I never did believe those stories about her knowing so much. Why, if / said as little and told as big eyes as Madam Owl, no doubt all the birds would call me wise, too. And now I'll tell you, my love, what I think we'd better do. Get up with the sun to-morrow morning—make another nest, and fasten it on the other side of the chimney."

Upon my word, my dear," said Mr. Swallow, "you're an extra-ordinary bird" and being very tired, he tucked his head under his wing and went to sleep.—Margaret Ratcnee, in St. Nicholas.

Couldn't Stop.

THIS is the way a good many boys get into difficulties—they get going and they can't stop." The boy who tells lies began at first to stretch the truth a little—to tell a large story—till he came out as a full grown liar.

TWO boys began by bantering each other, till they got a going and couldn't stop. They separated with black eyes and bloody noses!

DID you hear about the young man stealing from his master's drawer? He came from the country a providing boy. But the rest of the clerks went to the theater and smoked, and he thought he must do so too. He began thinking he would try it once or twice. He got going and couldn't stop. He could not resist the temptation when he knew there was money in the drawer. He got a going—he will stop in prison

SOME young men were, some years ago, in the habit of meeting together in a room at the public house, "to enjoy them selves"—to drink and smoke. One of them, as he was going there one evening, began to think there might be danger in the way. He stopped and considered a moment, and then said to himself, "Might about face!" He dropped his cigar, went back to his room, and was never seen at the public house. Six of the young men followed his example. The rest got a going, and could not stop till they landed most of them in a drunkard's grave. Beware, boys, of the first cigar or chew of tobacco. Be sure, before you start, that you are in the right way, for when you are going down hill, it is hard to stop!

One night a miller was awakened by his camel trying to get his nose into the tent.

"It is very cold out here," said the camel, "I only want to put my nose in."

The miller made no objections.

Soon the camel asked to have his neck in, then his feet, and meeting with no opposition from his master, he soon had his whole body in. This was very disagreeable to the miller, who complained of the camel's conduct.

"If you don't like it you can go," answered the camel "for I have got possession and shall stay; you can't get rid of me now."

Boys, this ugly camel represents the evil habits and little sins which, if not continually watched, creep into your lives unawares. The drunkard, the liar, the gambler, the thief, the murderer, all began by saying to sin, "You can't get rid of me."—Morning Star.

The One Safe Friend.

THERE is one safe friend for every mother. It is her mother. Whom should you trust, in whom have confidence, if not in her? No one else loves you so unselfishly, and no one else has loved you so long. It is right that girls should be confidential with their mothers. There are times when every young woman needs an older woman to guide and help her, and her mother is at those times more than ever her safest guardian. If she has no mother, let her pour her troubles and unfold her perplexities to some motherly woman, aunt, sister, friend, in whom she can believe. Many a lamentable would be saved by a woman rolled away, and many a mortification spared, if girls would remember that they have not the wisdom of Solomon nor the sagacity of Talleyrand to get on their unwinkled brows. Situations which baffle them would be plain to more experienced eyes, and they might be guided over hard places.—M. E. Sunpster.

Passing the Lachine Rapids.

THE various other rapids are passed, we are near Lachine, and the interest becomes intense. Just the Spartan run of the Lachine Rapids! Is the captain sure of his men? Is everything ready? Are the ropes all right? Are the engines going down hill, it is hard to stop!

Intelligence from Washington that Congress has called upon the President for information touching the conclusion of the Treaty of St. Louis.

Congress seems very much on the constitutional stretch in the matter of taking charge of state affairs, and I have no love for court intervention. Among the U. S. Statutes I find no law authorizing the President to act as Governor of Louisiana, and I have no fear that he will.

The election in Ohio on the second of next month, which is to determine the possession of the House of Representatives in Washington, is full now of the most earnest and influential of the Republican statesmen of the Mississippi Valley and the North. Most men in Ohio, I imagine, own a farm. In the people of small means and intelligence, of whom a majority will be there represented, and I think a majority of the people, could find a friend. We intend to be among the number. We intend that the Democratic party shall not come into power in this country on the issue of a hard currency. We intend that the finance bill shall be repealed. We intend that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not be a party to the issue of bonds to pay the interest on the bonds

OUR RADIX BETTER.

NEW YORK, June 6, 1876.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

A very grateful as well as timely plan and proposition was the "Go to real work" movement of the people's part at Cincinnati, worthy of a week at Chautauqua and on the evening of the 20th. Great men most readily be content with the hope of a postponed ripening of their fame and the accomplishing of every that is to effect the three score of years now been denied light to shine. The life of Mr. Wm. Cullen Bryant presents a beautiful exception to this usual rule. Length of years has been given him to behold the fruition of his labors and he has had the material thereto and means and leisure has not been wanting within to use the decisions of his previous low down to the voluntary and gladly rendered homage.

On the evening above mentioned a concert was conducted by Mr. Vanderbeck and with increasing excitement and speech. The president of the hour in the chair, at which Mr. Bryant, of Brooklyn, and the fourth with which a was performed were contributed from all over the country, and the testimony is thus a universal one. The vast multitude an exquisite specimen of the fibers and life art, nicely executed with appropriate sets, was drawn from Mr. Bryant's works, possessing considerable interest as a fine model for those of the second rank. This masterpiece of American sculpturing was designed and executed in this city at a cost of $5,000.

Sessions has left town positively going to get under a tree somewhere and his death! And it is well known that when he sets a way the more grass he walks and the more and long can arrest the speed of, so that the Purple will have to find an easy road that its very form may be wrinkles. Even the hotel will go prostrate with a long feather duster to get a wall or other thing to depend on in passing and so up on various grounds. The only ball dancer, which a few weeks ago would have enlightened this city on a pleasure bath, seems to have entirely disappeared. Even the dealers in goods go for not so laughably as to be connected actively meditation, and the genteel vendor of cigarettes and wines, both dead and lungs were wont to occupy weather the late chorus morning may so much a cooling of summer. It seems not to fetch a single head across them in summary to relish very easy going case now.

Strange to say, the season is true superior to the general prostration. Jerome Park has closed its successful remedies week amid the applause of excellent to-morrow. The Saratoga Club can trace to come down and shine for a season to knock the chunk of health out a hundred the centre of attraction to the innumerable games, the excursion boats swarm with humanity, and the theatres perspire jubilantly. The Mighty Dollar is no less mighty than at 6:01, home evening Joe Murphy makes the "Corner Grow" acceptable to big audiences the Yokes continue to captivate eyes, ears and hearts, and "Pique" gathers going at it passes its 200th performance and goes on into the short supplementary short which its popularity compels.

PHILADELPHIA, June 21.

Nothing among the recent arrivals of foreign goods has excited such wonder and admiration as the handiwork of Russia. Politically we have learnt a little of this country, and have long known it as a general way as great and progressive, but I think Americans generally have had a vague idea that Russia has hardly yet got up into the line of northern civilization, at least in arts and manufactures. The present show, however, will throughly disabuse of such notions such of our people as examine those specimens of her work. I cannot of course, more than allude to this department, but before leaving the subject must say a word about the carving and silver work, which is the most striking of all their display. The richness of the work is hardly less astonishing than its exquisite delicacy. Vases and dishes, crosses of beaten metal and other rare and quaint articles of use and ornament make up a collection worthy of Aladdin's palace. Perhaps the finest work in it all is that shown on some oaks baskets which look like lace, so delicately limned in gold. Cross

CENTENNIAL JOTTINGS.

CHILI has a remarkably fine exhibit of the mineral wealth of that country.

THE news of the success of the Centennial is arousing great attention in Europe.

IN the Egyptian exhibit is a statue of Rameses the second, dated 1250 years B.C.

SAN FRANCISCO alone is a remarkable exhibit. Here is shown an Agricultural Hall, and was contributed by the State of Oregon.

THE Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have a model cottage in the Main Hall specimens of "man's dumbanimality."

THE new exhibits display an immense improvement, both in variety and finish, showing the extensive application of this useful instrument.

M. RITTER, of the Russian Commission, who has attended all the European Expositions, says the Centennial surpasses and forms worthy a finish to the extensive beauty of the grounds and thoroughness of the management are unrivaled.

THE expense of the mail burglar alarm now at the Exhibition are almost, undoubtedly those of American inventors. In the Norwegian building there are two specimens, but they happen to possess no particular merit. In this field America leads the world, to the dismay of many other inventors, modestly, small and great.

MR. IRVINGTON, President of the Board of Centennial Commissioners, says the idea of having a general trial of approved implements in daily field purpose of awarding premiums, has been mentioned to the managers of the Exposition. There will be several trials of such implements at various times, say on general test, and an annual one.

A MOVE is on foot for Independence Hall and may extend make a grand exposition of Memorial Hall. Scale. Dimensions to be one to the foot, weight, 4,000 pounds. It is proposed to replace the interior and exterior of the old building as it is, of German silver covered with red gold. Inside are decorations of gems to a thousand dollars each, and the whole will be of the furniture rosewood.

THE four quarters of the globe are represented as essential near the centre of the Main Building by a series of female figures, representing Europe, Asia, Africa and America. On the sides of each figure are two portraits of the great men of each quarter. Europe has Shakespeare and Charlemagne; Asia, Confucius and Mohammed; Africa, Ramses and Sesostris; America, Washington and Franklin. Each group is draped with the flags of their respective nationalities.

SOME of the Philadelphia architects were highly complimented a few days since by the press of that city on their liberality in announcing that they would give a grand banquet one week and half a day. Saturday for two or three weeks to enable them to see the Exposition. It turns out, however, that the liberal mechanics, to make up for the banquet, have decided to dispense their supply of their usual fortnight's vacation, and the papers are drawing whether the compliment shall be enacted or not.

THE Philadelphia correspondent of the Boston Journal says: "Let it be recorded as one of the great benefits accruing from the International Exhibition of 1876 that it taught the masses of the American people much reverence for art, gave them tastes of its beauties and models, and awakened their sense of them. It will venture to say that the workmen who have seen the beautiful samples of house decoration exhibited here will not much longer be satisfied with plain and barren walls, or with sharp angles, and with atrocious colors. The era of reform has arrived."

PATRIOTISM WEIGH, of the Centennial Board of Finance, prints a card in regard to the conflict of authority between the Board and the Commission, in which he says: "I regret that any public reference has been made to this unpleasant matter, but as the members of the Board of Finance are controlled by men who have a common purpose, and the public may rest assured that harmony of action is paramount with them, and will overcome any differences of opinion growing out of the obscurity of the acts of Congress which have heretofore arisen or may hereafter arise. The Centennial celebration must be glorious in all its features, and this it will be marred by the action of its managers."

THE Iowa exhibit is one of which that flourishing State may well feel proud. When you get into the Agricultural Building you are bewildered by the vast display of productions in that wonderfully interesting department of the exhibition. You are so dazed by the rich and novel displays of everything in general that for the moment you feel at loss to know where to find anything in particular. But notice the figures and letters on the upright pillars of the large building. Follow them up until you find column C, No. 15, and there you will behold the space filled by Iowa products. The collection comprises specimens of soil from thirty-five different counties of the State (Marshall County being the centre), and numerous varieties of wood, fruits and cereals. The specimens of soil are inclosed in large glass tubes, six feet long, showing the soil for that depth below the surface, and giving almost every conceivable line and shade which farther earth is capable of assuming. The fruits, which are on ingenious shelf-brackets, and with excellent taste, comprise 500 different varieties of apples, and varieties of pears—no peaches, as the peach crop was a failure last season. There are forty varieties of corn, seventy-five of wheat, oats and rye, and other cereals, and 100 varieties of wood.—Our Chicago Journal.

LAST fall the Turkish Government entered into contract with parties on the Danube for the construction of certain bridges, but the manufacturers or contractors having reason subsequently to doubt the ability of the sultan to pay for them, prudently suspended operations. We have reason to believe, however, that within a short time past such arrangements have been made as will assure, if they have not already assured, the completion of these suspended contracts and the delivery of the war material. It is also understood that the Russian and German Governments have lately been in the copper market to some extent—for not without significance in view of existing complications between Turkey and her powerful neighbors. Austrian lake copper, it is well known, is the best in the world for cartridge manufacture, and its superior qualities in this respect and for other war material secure for it a high place in the European markets.—N. Y. Bulletin.

What Sleep Will Cure.

THE cry for rest has always been louder than the cry for food. Not that it is more important, but it is often harder to get. The best rest comes from sound sleep. Of two men or women, otherwise equal, the one who sleeps best will be the most moral, healthy and efficient.

Sleep will do much to cure irritability of temper, peevishness and nervousness. It will restore to vigor an overworked brain. It will bind up and make strong a weary body. It will do much to cure dyspepsia, particularly that variety known as nervous dyspepsia. It will relieve the laggnor and prostration felt by consumptives. It will cure hypochondria. It will cure the blues. It will cure sorrow. Indeed, we might make a long list of the ills and maladies that sleep will cure.

The cure of sleeplessness, however, is not so easy, particularly in those ▸country on account of his violence and crimes, went to the new land in the West. He established a home for himself, and, three years later, he was back in Ireland with a wonderful tale. In the quaint language of the chronicler, "in order to entice people to go to his new country, he called it Greenland, and painted it out as such an excellent land for pasture, wood and fish, that the next year he was followed thither by twenty-five ships full of colonists, who had furnished themselves richly with household goods and cattle of all sorts; but only fourteen of these ships arrived." The other eleven, we are left to surmise, were wrecked on the way.—St. Nicholas for July.

Gov. Noyes' Speech in the Convention.

When Ohio was called on Gov. Noyes arose and said:

GENTLEMEN: On behalf of the forty-four delegates from Ohio, representing the entire Republican party of Ohio, I have the honor to present to this Convention the name of a statesman who has been tried and proved throughout the country; one held in high respect and honor and affection at home. Under a man who, during the dark and stormy days of the rebellion, bolstered his courage and his flag until the authority of our Government was established from the lakes to the gulf, and from the rivers around to the ocean; a man who has had the care and forethought, since the war was over, to be take electoral to his country, while entitled thus to our added, and subsequently the rarer fortune of having had what other men covet most, the gift of the people of Ohio, Alburtis Thurman, George B. Pendleton and William Allen. [Prolonged cheers.] He is a gentleman who has proved his faith by the test of defeating Democratic aspirants for the Presidency, and we in Ohio all have a notion that, from such a gentleman we will hesitate to accept. [Cheers.] In presenting the name of John Davis, permit me to say we wage no war upon the distinguished gentlemen whose names have been mentioned here to-day [cheers.] They have rendered great service to their country, while entitled thus to our respect and gratitude. [Applause.] I have no word to utter against them. I only wish to say that how Hayes is the peer of these gentlemen in integrity, in statesmanship, in possession of a part of France that then name is still preserved in the title of the province of Normandy. Before the time of King Alfred, they ravaged England continually.

These people, who have left their names all over Europe, were never welcome invaders. Even all loose, wholesome invaders. Even all loose, which one's women has at the ages given. A good idea of the table can be formed from the statement that it begins with giving the girl of fourteen, twenty-one chances; runs up to girl of twenty or twenty-one with 243 chances and from that point rapidly decreases to the lady of thirty-nine or forty, who can only marry a widower.

M. COLASANTI has pursued a series of experiments, reported in the English Mechanic, which go to show that germs of organisms will resist a much greater degree of cold than the adult forms of organisms are capable of sustaining. A number of eggs were placed in a mixture of ice and salt from one to two hours, during which the temperature of the mass went down to twenty-one. After the eggs were removed from this unwholesome, rising again to twenty-four deg. at the end of the second hour, there was not a single animalcule developed, while each egg was found to contain numerous young animalcules that sleep well enjoy.

Rest air and free warm a room.

Freedom from too much care.

A clean stomach.

A clear conscience.

Avoidance of stimulants, narcotics.

For those who are over-worked, long, regular, sound sleep, like sleepless nights, we commend the adoption of such habits as shall secure sleep; otherwise life will be short, and what there is of it sadly imperfect. Herald of Health.

The Vikings The Discovery of Iceland and Greenland.

THE Northmen, in the seventh, eighth and ninth centuries after the birth of Our Lord, inhabited the great peninsula of Norway and Sweden, with the adjacent islands. They have also left branches established in Denmark, Iceland, the Faroe Islands, and all along the coasts of Northern Europe. They were a wild, rough and tumultuous race, so given to roving and adventure that they made their appearance, at one time or another in their history, in every part of Europe which could be reached by sea. They certainly visited the shores of the Mediterranean, and they once held in complete possession of a part of France that then name is still preserved in the title of the province of Normandy. Before the time of King Alfred, they ravaged England continually.

These people, who have left their names all over Europe, were never welcome invaders. Even all loose, which one's women has at the ages given. A good idea of the table can be formed from the statement that it begins with giving the girl of fourteen, twenty-one chances; runs up to girl of twenty or twenty-one with 243 chances and from that point rapidly decreases to the lady of thirty-nine or forty, who can only marry a widower.

Warned by the trials which other voyagers had had when trying to find vast lands, Ekko carried in the three ravens which had previously been consecrated by the pagan priests of Norway. Two ravens were supposed to belong to Odin, or Woden, the chief deity of the Northmen, who is of all that happens in the world. And Ekko relied on the ravens to tell him when land was in sight. The first raven, being set free, returned to the land whence the ship had sailed; therefore this was yet the nearest shore. The second was let loose some days afterward, and, after soaring in the air, came back to the ship, showing thereby that there was no land in sight. But this and the third, when set at liberty after two days, mounted up into the sky, circled about as if to take a view of the horizon, and then took a straight flight into the West. Ekko followed in that direction, and so reached the island for which he searched.

The colony did not thrive. It was broken up, and the colonists returned to Norway, bringing an evil report of the land, which they called Iceland. But in 875, ten years after Ekko's failure, one Earl Ingolf, a great nobleman with one of his neighbors and had killed some of his thralls, or bondmen, found it necessary for him to flee from the wrath of the King, Harold Haarfager (Harold the Fairhaired), and he accordingly took his ships and went to Iceland. Here he founded a colony which has lasted through all the centuries—a remarkable life community.

Though Iceland was thus settled by the Vikings, and although these sea-rovers still followed their wave-wandering life, we must believe that they were no longer like "pyrates" of the mainland. One of these sailors was Gunnbiorn, who, driven westward by a storm, soon after the settlement of Iceland, fell upon the shores of Greenland, to which region he gave the name of Gunnbiorn's Rocks. He made his way home again, for the strait between Greenland and Iceland is not so wide but one may see the shores of each, when midway between them, of a clear day. He gave, like all discoverers, a very glowing account of his new land, but none went thither until the next century.

In 985, Eric the Red, who, like Ingolf, had been obliged to quit his own

Rutherford Birchard Hayes.

Rutherford Birchard Hayes is of Scotch ancestry on his father's side, and of English ancestry on his mother's side. His parents were natives of Vermont, whence they emigrated to Ohio in 1817. Mr. Hayes was born at Delaware, in that State, on the 4th of October, 1822. After a careful preparatory course he was graduated from Kenyon College, at Gambier, Ohio, in 1842, at the head of his class, although he was its youngest member. He at once began the study of law, and was graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1845.

He began practice at Fremont, Ohio, but removed to Cincinnati in 1849. His reputation as a lawyer was soon established, and he was employed in some of the most noted cases ever tried there. His personal popularity, too, was great, and in 1858 he was nominated for Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in Cincinnati, but he declined the nomination. In 1859 the Common Council of that city elected him to fill a vacancy in the office of City Solicitor, and three years later he was re-elected to the office by the people, running ahead of his ticket. This office he held until 1861 to the satisfaction of men of both parties.

At the breaking out of the war found his success as a lawyer and as a public man assured, and his loyal friends, especially among the young men, was very great. His position on the great questions of the war was not equivocal. "Honesty in the civil war," he wrote in January, 1861, "as in every other war, is the best policy." And war less than compromise. We can conquer from them. The free States alone can bring enough men to the field to overwhelm the South in numbers. They have also the superior resources which we have. They have the navy. Let us be united, and we can and will preserve the Union. Divided we fall. Delay invites foreign intervention. Let us be united, and we can and will maintain the Constitution and the laws."

He entered the army as Major of the Twenty-third Ohio Infantry, of which W. S. Rosecrans, afterward Major-General, was Colonel. The regiment was sent to Clarksburg, W. Va., in July, 1861, and was at once engaged in active service. Hayes served as Judge Advocate on Gen. Rosecrans's staff, and in November, 1861, was made Brigade Assistant Adjutant-General. He won by military reputation to dash and bravery in the battle of Carnifex Ferry, and his command was attached to Cox's Kanawha Division in the fall of May, 1862, he was wounded by a musket-ball.

In the following August his regiment was attached to Gen. Sheridan's Division, and arrived in Maryland just in time to participate in the battle of South Mountain. His regiment, of which he had command, lost in the attack, and both Colonel of the regiment and officers out of three hundred and ten engaged were soon killed, while one hundred more were wounded. Hayes had been promoted to Brigadier-General for gallant conduct in this battle.

Previous to this battle Hayes had been in a number of skirmishes, and was present at the battle of Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek. Hayes was at Cedar Creek when Sheridan made his celebrated ride. This ride, which Buchanan Read has immortalized in his stirring poem, and the events of the day, were described by Hayes in a letter to his wife, written on the day after the battle, as follows:

> "I am writing a couple of miles away from the line, in a place which seemed to be more quiet—a house which has been used as a hospital. Crook has been badly beaten this morning by Gordon and did not charge the enemy's line [several words illegible] to be seen. Early there, in front of the rear, on the Winchester pike, and almost to Winchester. Sheridan, who was at Washington [several words illegible] arrived on the field this morning, came to the front and stretch to the battle-line. Then Crook's corps is gone up—as Sheridan jumps up, gives one more run with his horse and starts up the pike. Just as he starts he sees a man on a horse coming down the pike. He stops riding on them now, 'boys,' and so he rode off. A mile or two out he met Crook's men coming to him. The men took their places the line moved forward, and—well, the whole army is now driving the enemy."

It would be impossible, in this article, to mention all the contests and services in which Hayes took part. Suffice it to say that his commander, Sheridan chose to assist his cavalry, in attacking Early's lines, and he took a leading part in the desperate campaign which followed, at one time receiving his commission successfully against the enemy through a morass in which his horse sank helpless, and again springing from his wounded body of the rebel who had slain and his soldiers brought him dead, and participating in the capture of his carcass.

For his bravery he was promoted to be a Brigadier-General from Oct. 19, 1864, and was brevetted a Major-General.

In 1864 he was elected to Congress, but when his friends urged him to come home and work in his own behalf, he replied:

> IN CAMP, OCT. 7.
> I have other business just now. Any man who would leave the army at this time for a position for Congress ought to be replaced.
> R. B. HAYES.

He was, however, elected, and in 1866 was re-elected again. He resigned his seat in 1867 to accept the Republican nomination for Governor of Ohio against Mr. Thurman, whom he defeated by nearly 3,000 majority. He was re-elected Governor in 1869 over Judge Stanley Matthews by an increased majority; in this year the Democrats first nominated Gen. Rosecrans against Hayes, but he refused to run. His administration as Governor was very popular in the State, and when he retired in 1872 the newspapers of both parties joined in praising him.

In July, 1872, Mr. Hayes was strongly urged to consent to be the Republican candidate for Congress from the Second Ohio District, but he positively refused. The convention, however, nominated him, and under the pressure of the demand he accepted the nomination. The result, by-the-way, was that Democratic, and he was defeated, but they gave the party full satisfaction in every case.

Respectfully,
W. H. CRAWFORD,
Sec. Am. Exp. Co.

The Cincinnati Nomination.

The result has more than justified expectations. The nomination of Gov. Hayes, of Ohio, is eminently public and sagacious, and deserves, as it receives, the heartiest congratulations. It satisfies all reasonable demands, the whole Republican party as no other candidate could have united it. The fitness of the other prominent candidates has hardly engaged him without the least sacrifice of principle or feeling. The second choice of everybody, when it became evident that neither of the other prominent candidates could be nominated, became the first choice of all.

Gov. Hayes is a strong candidate, if not the very strongest that could have been put into the field. He was a brave soldier and serviceable General in the war. His military record is both honorable and creditable in the highest degree. He afterward served with credit in Congress. He is a pure civilian, devoted in his domestic relations, of unblemished character, of the most unexceptionable habits, and of unquestioned ability. He is a ripe scholar, a good writer, a clear thinker, and a forcible speaker. He has had large executive experience as Governor of Ohio, and is a man of affairs. He is a statesman of the best type, and a politician of the highest character. He is a man who will not only carry the old Republican States, but will carry, we believe, Indiana, Ohio and New York, as well as Pennsylvania and Illinois. Taken all in all, we are not sure that the man shall we could have chosen, but we are sure that we could not have chosen a better

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in the practice of medicine before the medical profession, and during all that time was constantly engaged in practical experiments, and investigations in relation to the healing properties of medicines. The result of his researches is the discovery of the Magnetic Ointment, which has been used in the form of an outward application.

Certain, it is, that the remedy has performed more cures in the attended with the same degree of success. Cancers have been healed, and Tumors removed, by the use of a few and comparatively small applications.

It never fails, when fresh vegetable extracts can be obtained, and money no loss to the operation of the body, and the restoration of the blood. By this agent a commencement is made in the system of death and decay, which causes to disappear from sight and smell.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every part of the human frame, every bone, and fastens on the disease, and either extirpates or changes it into healthy action, as readily with the nail as with the hammer.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to persons who had for years used the most powerful mercurial preparations, and had suffered from 20 to 30 years, in some cases, in consequence of the effects of the Mercury.

No patient ever need die with this disease when the Magnetic Ointment can be procured.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most effectual remedy ever discovered. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivalled.

In ninety-nine cases out of 8 hundred, it will effect entire relief in the worst cases of Nervous Headache in twenty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of unparalleled value.

A Specific for the Spine, Consumption, Affections of the Liver, Bronchitis, Rheumatism, Chronic Coughs, Colds, Chronic Diarrhœa, Asthma, Dysentery, Pleurisy, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pains in the Shoulders, Breast, Side, Head, Backache, Fever Sores, Scrofula, Inflammation of the Kidneys, Inflammation of the Bowels, Piles, Rheumatism, Inflamed Eyes, Weak Eyes, Neuralgia, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Inflammation of the Womb, Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, Fever Sores, Fistula, Diseases of the Urinary Organs, Wounds, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Sore Nipples, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurvy, Incipient Consumption, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the Side, Pain in the Back, Croup, Whooping Cough, Asthma, Influenza, Pain in the Bowels, Cramp, Cholera Morbus, Sea Sickness, Nausea, Vomiting, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Female Complaints, Lumbago, Sciatica, or Hip Disease, Tic Doloureux, or Facial Neuralgia, Diseases of the Skin, Chronic Sore Eyes, Tetter, Ringworm, Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Tumors, Cancers, Cancerous Humors, Fever Sores, Fistula, Worms of all kinds, Dropsy, Dysentery, Colic, Cholera, Cholera Infantum, Measles, Small Pox, Mumps, Chicken Pox, Scarlet Fever, Nettle Rash, Hives, Mercurial affections, Poisoning, Ulceration of the Stomach, Ulceration of the Bowels, and in all other constitutional Diseases. OUR RAPIN LETTER.

From the Own Correspondent.

New York, June 29, 1876

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Had I known what was in store for us in the immediate future, I should have postponed my last week's remarks on temperature to the present time. Though the subject can hardly be said to be exhausted as yet in all its variety loving public will hardly tolerate repeated references to one topic even though it be an all absorbing one, and I am thus debarred from telling you what a time we are having in the embraces of old Sol, whose excessive intimacy is becoming universally contempt among the cities of Manhattan. Were it not for that, I would tell you how the air flames and the asphalt pavements turn to mere logs into which the feet of pedestrians sink at every step, how the street voices of cheap dealers are trying to decide whether they will invest their growing wealth in lemon stone fronts or United States bonds, legs for men wearing apparel to their customary high look as though their owners had just come out from under the hose pump, and collars that betray no encouragement in every crime.

The Swedish crown prince Oscar, who is here on a tour of Centennial and general exploration was in town for a few days this week and was the recipient of a glorious serenade by the various Scandinavian musical societies of the city whose singing we managed a phonograph was not heard.

On the evening upon which the result of the St. Louis Convention was made known we were treated to a banquet at noon Tuesday by the clubs who either were politically pleased or had won bets on the nomination. Canvas-backed, and redheads, crackers, tacpaddies and the like made night hideous with their noises. A large proportion of our population are so habitual of celebrating this Centennial year that they take it easily, and having got started on Wednesday evening will doubtless keep it up for a straight week.

PHILADELPHIA, July 1.

I don't believe it was as hot as 100 a century ago this time. In fact I am not only certain that it was not. With the thermometer hanging round the Centennial figure Thomas Jefferson never could have stopped fanning himself and drinking lemonade long enough to evolve the Declaration from his inner consciousness, nor could the descendant have written autographs appear in that connection have worked themselves up to the pitch of reckless patriotism necessary to make them run their necks into King George's noose by putting their names to that incendiary document, unless, indeed, they were so hot and miserable as to be perfectly willing to die. While then we, their degenerate sons, are weeping at every pore we are somewhat inclined to envy our venerable predecessors their meteorological condition until we reflect that they at that time had never so much as thought of a grand Exposition, and then we at once realize that we have got decidedly the best of it.

What the severity of the recent temperature has done to pull down the average attendance at the Fairmount grounds has been just about made by the large increase of visitors attracted by the grand preparations which have been made for the coming anniversary. The hotels contain already about ten thousand guests, or over two thirds of their total capacity. Everything points to a big time on Monday and Tuesday. Money seems to be no object in getting ready, everybody is going in for a big time and all will throw themselves into it in a feverish, energetic, hard-working and thus truly American manner. If New York is covered with flags, Philadelphia is made of them. The city looks a fair representative of good John Bull as a "Vanity Fair." From end to end it is solid with bunting, everything to which a piece of cloth could in any way be fastened, being covered with Union Jacks or somebody else's colors, the same liberal variety being observed here as in New York.

As this letter will probably not reach your readers until after the great festival I will not occupy your space with the gaudy-hued municipal and private programmes of the day. Their contents can as well be imagined as described.

At the Exhibition grounds the daily proceedings go on as usual, the bursting attractions of the place continuing to bewitch and bewilder old and new comers alike. Last week I spoke of some of the beauties of the Russian mechanical Court, a little less admirable in the display of the fine and light branches of manufacture, but perhaps more interesting, including leather, saddles, carriages, cutlery, and a great variety of musical instruments. The latter is silver and gold throat, heavily embroidered with precious metals and studded with gems, and the cutlery is of the kind exhibited by the Persian ambassador that came in the days of Noah. With regard to those latter articles, I can only express my astonishment at the consummate skill displayed in their manufacture, considering that the crude implements from which they issue are entirely those of the stone age. Another interesting feature in the Russian department is the display of the Imperial Porcelain Manufactory, containing specimens of the finest ware ever produced in that celebrated establishment.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally re-storing the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and inveterate cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many men, women, and children, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display an decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

CENTENNIAL JOTTINGS.

JAPAN rests in Horticultural hall are losing trust.

IN the Delaware exhibit is a bank bill which was made in 1769.

TODAY a number of visitors for thirty-three cents—1,296,042. Pees for admission, $428,593.26.

AN Indian dug-out, sixty feet long, and made from one tree, is one of the wonders of the show.

GERMANY, among other curious things, has contributed a mediæval armor weighing several tons.

THE Japanese understand the art of boating nicely, and are practicing it regularly on the Centennial.

THE saturnine half-holiday of newsdealers, clerks, and salesmen large is to cease by attendance at the Centennial.

GEORGIA stands five nine feet high, eighty-seven and a half inches to the apex, ten feet high, eighty-seven inches on end.

A meeting of the Board of Finance says: "It has daily expenses of fifty hours, and during the Exhibition are about to arise, which is soon to be reduced."

A thousand of coal is being erected in the centre of the Government building. It is already about forty feet in length, and will be continued to the space of seventy feet.

OVER 6,000 visitors from New Jersey have visited the Centennial, and it is estimated that the roll of visitors at the close of the exhibition will show nearly one million Jerseymen.

IN the Worcester Mass. exhibit in Machinery Hall can be seen the process of making the 13,000 copies of the Declaration of Independence in Hasbrouck, and from which Isaac Tucker read the Worcester Spy centennial day.

THE Pacific Centennial Hall, the Dakota section of the Trans-Pacific States and Territories exhibit, is one of the most beautiful passing of the State buildings. Its decorations consist mainly of native woods, which are very attractive and suggestive.

A score of old landmarks in Machinery Hall a knitting machine 70 years old, in the same hall is a perfect fac simile of the first steam engine ever used on this continent. It was imported from England in 1753, and was used for pumping water in a copper shop near Newark, N. J.

ONE of the oddest pieces of clock known to associate of ancient times, is found in the case of the Canadian section in exhibition at the Centennial. The piece is made entirely of wood, and was constructed from American clock manufacturers, against whom these Canadians compete for the premium.—Boston Times.

WOOD CUTTER, of canton, China, came over with the Celestial Commissioners and obtained from Uncle Sam the appointment of Centennial mail-carrier. It looks well in the suit of gray uniform although he cannot wade the mud in English sentence, he has a trait, which is sweet that in delivering letters he never swears. He puts them all in order, superscription side up, and says: "You pickee up letters, ebly one."

OVER the Women's Pavilion on the Centennial Grounds is a Kindergarten school on the Froebel style. There comes a week twenty little children sent from the Northern Home for Friendless Orphans and Destitute Children, of Philadelphia, and at ten o'clock exercises commence in the neat little white building. The toddler has two necklaces, and as the children have been in training for some months, they are sufficiently advanced to illustrate the schemes of the system.

The Chinese Widow.

IT all widows could give as emphatic a proof of being inconsolable as did a certain Miss Cheng, in Foochow, China, the world would be, perhaps, somewhat poorer in tears, although many a middle-aged gentleman would lose a good wife. Miss Cheng, it appears, had ample opportunity to assuage her sorrows, upon the lesson of a second spouse, and might have doffed her weeds for the red flowers and gilded garments of a matrimonial "happy." But she was inconsolable. She not only told the kindly match-makers around her that nothing could compensate her for the loss of the lately departed Cheng, but announced that she was no longer fit for this world, and therefore intended straightway to follow Cheng to another. By method of departing, as expressed in herself, would hurry some what puzzled a foreigner if he had heard it, for she said that she would "ascend to heaven on the back of a stork." He would soon be learned, however, that this was one of those poetically metaphorical phrases in which the Oriental fancy abounds. To go to heaven on the back of a stork means, in our own prosy language, to be hanged. Mrs. Cheng availed herself of a device borrowed from the barbarian West, to seek her Cheng in realms yet more celestial than the Celestial Land. And she was as good as her word. The gallows which was erected for her cheerful sacrifice is described as having been very pretty indeed. It was graced with flowers and red cords, and was quite a tasteful and pleasing object to the eye. The widow, on the last, in such a case we hesitate to say "ideal" morning, arrayed herself in all the gowns finery of colored and gilt paper, with a paper crown upon her head and flowers pinned here and there on her person. She entered a sedan chair, and was conducted past the house of her friends to the place of "enthusiasm." It significant to know that on this final journey Mrs. Cheng was not too absorbed in grief to keep a too sober countenance, or confound the every-day creature comforts to which she had been used. It is explicitly declared that, as she made her progress in the sedan chair, she distinctly and repeatedly smiled, and—smoked a pipe. Ever and anon she would take the tea-cup bowl from her mouth to taste the sweetmeats offered to her by her friends as she came to them houses. Several thousand people witnessed the frame on the topmost limb of the tree. Each bell has two hammers, one heavy, the other light, the latter being operated so as to cause a soft tone when not desirable. On the floor, below the centre of the frame, are twenty-seven triangular levers, pivoted at one angle, so that a pull or depression on the outer ends causes the hammer attached to the other ends to strike the bell. These outer ends are connected by means of long, elastic strips of iron, called "swaging bars" to the keys with the operating apparatus, which is directly beneath the bells on the next floor below. On the operating floor thirteen large ranges, one set of eight levers, which look and work like pump handles. The upper set contains thirteen levers which operate the twelve half hammers. The lower set contains the same number, and they work the heavy ones. To prevent too much stiffness the wooden strips, twenty-six in number, are connected with the upper ends of the levers above and with the "pump" levers below by means of leathern straps. The latter levers are operated by hand, but, if desired, they may be disconnected from the upright strips and these fastened with long straps to a set of thirteen pedals at the bottom of the frame.

The Professor has no less than one thousand pieces in his repertoire, but he boasts far more of the merits of the bells than of his own accomplishments. He tells you that they are not simply bells, which means that they are not just as they came from the molds, having required no other tuning than the proper mixing of the metals and the proper mixture of their metallic ingredients and making them of the right size. Visitors sit in the nearest circular seats, which are exempt from the noise of these bells. They think, as the clear silvery sound strikes their grateful ears, what a delightful occupation the Professor has with nothing to do but worship cupidons all day long. He has, for instance, just began "Sweet vale of Avaca, how calm could I rest." He can go to the other end of the tower, and if you say that the Professor is resting, or that he is evidently in the land of poetic dreams, therein are people who would thank you for defining the condition of a short, stout gentleman, partially bald, with a Britishown whiskers and a round, good-natured face, lapping from side to side of the frame, pressing down the levers as rapidly as an expert pianist manipulates the keys of his instrument, and apparently in a state of serious mood damaging to startled lunch. The Professor has thrown aside his hat, vest and waistcoat. He is playing "Still as gently as moonlight." But, by shade of his own townsman, Poe, look how quickly the great drops of perspiration steal over his face! He stands at his work. The upper set of levers is level with his breast high. Down goes the deepest bass with lightning movement and heavy thud. It springs back to its place by the weight of the hammer on the triangular lever above. The upper "pump" levers do the same. He gently touches a soprano, sharps, parks a treble, shows a tenor half-way down, throws his whole weight on a bass—and all while one would say "Jack Robinson." As the extremity of each set of levers are over five feet apart, and it requires a pressure of twenty pounds to depress some of them to their furthest extent, a cool onlooker may form some conception of the amount of physical force which the Professor must accomplish in exerting such mighty compositions as "Yankee Doodle" and "Capt. Jinks." And yet he never misses a note, never makes a pish where he means a perk, and never hits the wrong bell. If any body is everybody's man it is the Professor. He plays "The Campbells are coming," and there are a thousand Hibernian listeners ready to swear they know him in "th' auld dart," where he was "the broth of a boy in airnest." "The Marseillaise" resounds over the park, and nine hundred and ninety-nine Frenchmen are skipping about like kangaroos, showing it to turns, and safely reached St. Louis's palace in St. Petersburg with it, where the Emperor stood with his brothers at the windows of the palace, and laughed at having won the bet. But on the stair-case of the palace one of the carriers slipped his foot and fell down, dragging several of his companions after him, and the precious box-ing-glass was broken into a thousand pieces. The Grand Duke, therefore, won his bet.

The Centennial Glasses.

THOSE each day—at sunrise, noon, and sunset—are the Centennial grounds enlivened by the tintinnabulations of a chime of bells in the northeastern tower of Machinery Hall. Their music is heard at other times also, just as the operator takes the notion. The bells are thirteen in number, representing the thirteen original States. Their aggregate weight is 24,000 pounds, that of the largest being 2,000 and that of the smallest 250. They were cast by McShane & Co., of Baltimore, and it is claimed that the chime is the finest in this country. It was planned by Prof. E. Widdows, who carries a huge silver bell on his watch chain. He formerly had charge of the chimes at the Metropolitan Church in Washington.

The bells are immovably suspended from an immense horizontal square frame on the topmost floor of the tower. Each bell has two hammers, one heavy, the other light, the latter being operated so as to cause a soft tone when not desirable. On the floor, below the centre of the frame, are twenty-seven triangular levers, pivoted at one angle, so that a pull or depression on the outer ends causes the hammer attached to the other ends to strike the bell. These outer ends are connected by means of long, elastic strips of iron, called "swaging bars" to the keys with the operating apparatus, which is directly beneath the bells on the next floor below. HAIL THE REPUBLIC

(AIR—Hail to the Chief)

Hail the Republic, advancing in glory
Bright are her eyes with maternity's fire,
Well may the world read her record of glory
As one drawn to sun from the rainbirdsire
He who to fight was brave,
He who to die forgive to save
All that is most for our honor ennobled,
Calls from his starry height
Genuine tone deeper tight
Say the Republic a hundred years old!

Lift to the waiting while fair then is season,
Perfect by duty as by right, not after,
Tread not the footpace that would falter with seasons,
Tread not to friends, whose love is singular,
Keep what you know is true,
Bend not the manly row,
Honor for shame; they would offer no bold,
Let Hayes and Wheeler be
Leaders of victory
For the Republic a hundred years old!

Let from the West what a old-Rail advances!
Tread to the sword and the State, to their tunes,
Hope and the Future's eternal guards,
Treasure be tastes and magnetic be sparers
And from the Empire State
Onward a wardrobe be Turned by the counsels his country may hold,
Let Hayes and Wheeler be
Leaders of victory
For the Republic a hundred years old!

CAMPAIGN NOTES.

THE Boston Journal dont-ing this line: "Hurrah for Hayes!"

AT the ratification in Washington the other night, the Pennsylvania Republican Association bore a banner with the legend: "Keystone State, we Always Get on Whenever into the."

A correspondent of the New York Times says: "Hayes is getting fat, and fully to the nomination of Governor Hayes. The Republican party of the United States will be a unit in the support of the ticket."

The Baltimore County (Iowa) declares: "It is folly to attempt to cement the fact that the Democratic conditions have, in a great degree, brought together and reunited the shattered elements of the Republican organization."

Sing a song of sixpence,
Pocket full of rye,
Lots of votes for Hayes
Going pretty free,
When they heard of Hayes
Hayes on nomine,
Democrats had busted
As soon as said on.

V. L. Graphic.

The Auburn city of the Republican candidates for Governor and announcing themselves the candidates casting, as regards personal character and antecedents, no reflection upon them. They are unanimously respectable, as neither most respectable men, in the strict sense of their profession, and the Republican party are very much united.

"Where Hayes? Ask Sheridan and Custer.
Ask Early, if you will.
He was like some cheerful cricket
Against Fisher Hill.

Where Hayes? They were killers with Sherman
In days of frightful carnage
Before the Southern ignominy is felt.

Toledo Blade.

The Democratic papers are making a racket about Mr. Wheeler's action in the salary grab question. His connection with this matter is simply against the measure at every stage and on its final passage. After it passed, he drew back pay, as he was entitled to from the States boards, and turned the bonds into the Treasury with the request that they be cancelled, saying he would not accept them. Let us hear no more about the Democratic salary grab.

The Democratic senatorial managers don't like Hayes and Wheeler. They have been in insufferable record. There is no cause for scandal. They have each been long tried in public life, and are above suspicion. It will be a waste of time and ammunition to attempt to assail either of them. It won't stick. They are regarded as the most perfectly honest, public integrity as the Democrats are mocking—Republic Magazine.

Pauge (Ark.) Times.

A quarter of a pound of Paris green is said to have destroyed forever at Quakertown, Bucks County, Pa., considered adequate to still the pangs of hydrophobia which tormented him. It is the calculations were accurate, but if it is not Bucks County will be relieved the corpse that his features were terribly distorted

Keep the Liver Active.

The stone is a sound health reaction in order to maintain a healthy condition, organization and secretion shall be discharged with the least possible delay. Constipation which is essential to the well being of body body and mind, the liver, however, cannot perform its duties are dependent for their due performance, and in large degree on the proper action of stomach and blue pills, besides being hurtful in their operation, are powerful purgatives, with costly disorders or sluggishness of the liver. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, on the contrary, accomplish thoroughly what the above mentioned pills do imperfectly, and are besides a safe as well as potent remedy for biliousness, jaundice, dizziness, sick and sour stomach, sick headache, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels, as well as all impurities of the blood from whatever cause arising. They are, moreover, a sterling antidote to malaria.

The "Housekeeper" of our Health.

The liver is the great separating or blood purifying organ of the system. See the great housekeeper of our health at work; and the most surprising results speak in the blood and not one, as it were, the machinery of life is more liable to get out of order than the liver. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the only remedial agent Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are the best auxiliary remedy. Both are entirely vegetable, purely from the vegetable kingdom, and no mineral poisons but lurk in the system are by these relieve of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted action upon the system in such a way become completely remodeled and built up anew. Eruptions, humors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the fascinating influence of these potent yet safe and delightful medicines.

"Doctor, a child about three years old, was greatly afflicted with sores on his legs and feet, so that he could not walk his shoes and stockings. Had a great deal of trouble with him. Had tried many remedies ineffectually. At last we tried the Golden Medical Discovery, and in about three weeks he was entirely cured, his sores were all healed, and health much improved.

Respectfully yours, J. W. HOVER.
Versailles, Edgar Co., Ill., Jan. 23, 1875."

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

OF the 34,000 persons employed in watch making in Switzerland, nine-tenths are women.

THE gold in the vaults of the Bank of France at the present moment exceeds 500 tons in weight; in other words, it weighs about as much as twenty-one large engines of the first size.

THE small grain crop from Dallas to Mineola, Tex., along the line of the Texas & Pacific Railroad, will show a most satisfactory yield. The acreage this season, as compared with last year, was increased from 50 to 250 per cent.

THERE are now fifty-one anthracite furnaces in the Lehigh region, with a capacity for producing in the aggregate about 600,000 tons of iron per annum. Half of the number are, however, not in blast at this time. The two main coal used in making Scranton quality of iron is Scranton fellows. Coal, Schuylkill, Lehigh and Lackawanna, upon them also. There was no thought of party distinctions. They turned out men women, children, and made him their guest. They illuminated their houses. They had out their bands. It was a big time. The gladdest procession ever organized in town apparently. It extended from a kindly welcome to the depot. He called over the successes since he had been in the house over the neighbors, was as clear and honorable to the people of Fremont as any that he written in his life. It was not good, because he was in his life. In the year 1874-5, 137 British vessels, bearing 1,450 lives, sailed away and were never heard from, over two of them sailing from British and three from colonial ports. This affords parts good evense for Mr. Disnali's reform. In nineteen years, about 25,000 lives have been lost on the coasts of Great Britain by wrecking, and 75,000 lives saved from wrecks.—Springfield Mass. Republican.

In many recent experiments on fireproofing materials at Vienna, the following mixtures of salts were successfully employed: To twenty parts by weight of water and three of borax and two and a quarter of sulphate of magnesia. This forms an insoluble borate of magnesia, which surrounds and impregnates the threads or fibers to which it is applied, renders either the development of gases or the spread of flame very difficult. To one part liquid sal ammoniac, add two parts sulphate of zinc, and a sufficient quantity of water to form a syrupy solution. Impregnate the cloth with this solution, and then expose it to a gentle heat, which drives off the water and leaves the salts in the cloth. Another mixture consists of one part sal ammoniac, add two parts sulphate of zinc, and a sufficient quantity of water to form a syrupy solution. Impregnate the cloth with this solution, and then expose it to a gentle heat, which drives off the water and leaves the salts in the cloth.

A Late Autumn Wedding.

MARCH a note of the 5th of June, those who were so happy to be married, or began any enterprise on that date, for it was said by the stars to be a most auspicious day. He finished in 1845, it witnessed a somewhat exceptional and decidedly interesting bridal ceremony. The principal parties concerned in the widow over fifty, and a widower of probably a year or two under sixty, who had been lovers in their youth, had separated, married each some one else, had their partners, and after many years of marriage and widowhood have come together again, both seemingly as much in love as ever as they were when children. Their love, and been united till death do them part.

These might be luck in such an experiment with some people, but the promises most auspiciously. The late is young looking, still handsome, with a complexion that many girls might envy, has an ample income of her own, and no children to suffer from the loss of their mother, or the acquisition of a father. The gentleman is well-preserved, "well-looking," and has two grown sons—no daughters—who get their new "mamma" much more probably, than if it were their old one. No doubt of vanity was the ceremony, more glad, more sweet, than his bride of fifty, in whose cheeks the white and red played so alternately as if she had not already passed the summer of her days and reached the autumn, but still felt the thrill of expectancy beating at her heart, with its pain, its wonder, its mystery.

Two lives have two springs or two summers contributed to them, and so a friend ventured to suggest, urging also the "freedom" she had enjoyed, the liberty which, as she has likely felt, is in marriage contrast to the new scene of restraint which marriage would impose.

"I am so dreadfully lonely," replied the then unmarried bride, "and I don't want to be free or independent. I think our husbands are more the source of happiness than we dream of. At any rate, I shall be glad to have some one sufficiently interested in my welfare to scold me when I come home goings-out and my comings-in, and I shall accept the slight restriction it may impose for the sake of the comfort afforded."—Boston Journal, in Hall's Illinois American.

Saving and Having.

EVERY man must be content with poverty all his life, or he must learn to deny himself some luxuries and save, to lay the base of independence in the future. But if a man denies the family and spends all he earns himself, or his earnings be one or ten dollars every day, let him look for bean and hungry want at some future time—for it will surely come, no matter what he thinks. To save is absolutely the only way to get a solid fortune; there is no other certain mode. Those who shun this truth and cast to close plum, for-will be forever poor, and for their abstinate rejection of truth, misfrap will die in rags and filth. Let them save, and think themselves rich, though it be on more off a wind, and, consequently, that it would be possible to use a kite in bringing a vessel to windward, especially in the power could be applied low down and thus avoid excessive careening.

Effects of Smoke on Vegetation.

IN a paper addressed to the French Academy of Sciences, M. C. Husson calls attention to the disastrous effect of smoke on vegetation. For many years proprietors of vineyards situated in the vicinity of lime kilns have been complaining of the damage done to them by the lime-burning emanations, and various chemists have confirmed their statements. M. Husson, having an opportunity of examining the matter himself in a vineyard known as the Saint Enpril, near Toul, where lime kilns have been built, found that the wine made there had a disagreeable smoke and smell. This vineyard is situated on the slope of a small hill, between the canal and the railroad. The kilns occupy a lower side. The western winds drive the smoke from the Kilns to the vineyard. The leaves of the vines had a taste quite similar to that with which the wine was infected, and the few remaining grapes had it all the same. The soil was also found opposite side of the railway line there are other vineyards, which, being sheltered from the emanations of the lime kilns, produce wine of quite an agreeable character. The lime kilns, moreover, produce considerable characteristics. Several days later, the kilns being extinguished, a new inspection was proceeded to after copious falls of rains. The foul smell and taste had disappeared from the leaves. By way of experiment meanghne was made to go up and down along the vineyard, its heavy black smoke being driven up on the leaves by wind; a thick deposit of soot was found on the leaves, but which imparted no taste to them. Hence it was proved beyond a doubt that the empyreumatic taste and smell, resembling that of creosote, sometimes, by owing to the decomposition of limestone in the kilns.

IN a paper addressed to the French Academy of Sciences, M. C. Husson calls attention to the disastrous effect of smoke on vegetation. For many years proprietors of vineyards situated in the vicinity of lime kilns have been complaining of the damage done to them by the lime-burning emanations, and various chemists have confirmed their statements. M. Husson, having an opportunity of examining the matter himself in a vineyard known as the Saint Enpril, near Toul, found that the wine made there had a disagreeable smoke and smell. This vineyard is situated on the slope of a small hill, between the canal and the railroad. The kilns occupy a lower side. The western winds drive the smoke from the Kilns to the vineyard. The leaves of the vines had a taste quite similar to that with which the wine was infected, and the few remaining grapes had it all the same. The soil was also found opposite side of the railway line there are other vineyards, which, being sheltered from the emanations of the lime kilns, produce wine of quite an agreeable character. The lime kilns, moreover, produce considerable characteristics. Several days later, the kilns being extinguished, a new inspection was proceeded to after copious falls of rains. The foul smell and taste had disappeared from the leaves. By way of experiment meanghne was made to go up and down along the vineyard, its heavy black smoke being driven up on the leaves by wind; a thick deposit

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

CHOCOLATE FOR THE SICK.—When an invalid uses chocolate, it should be made in the ordinary way and then softened to stand until cold. The only parts collecting on the surface should be taken off. Then boil the liquid again, and add sugar and milk as usual.—Boston Rural.

KEEPING MEAT.—One of the Cincinnati Gazette's correspondents says this is a good way to keep meat after it is smoked: Take one pint of molasses, one-half pound black pepper, and six eggs, mix together and paste it on the meat side. The above amount will answer for eight or ten hams. We have practiced this method seven or eight years and never failed to keep our hams sweet and free from insects.

SPANISH CREAM.—The Christian Union says: Dissolve one pint of milk, four eggs, one-half ounce gelatine, then add the other pint of milk, and stir it over the fire, in a farina kettle. Boil three weeks of the eggs with three tablespoonfuls of sugar, and stir into milk, just before it boils. When it comes to a boil, take it off, stir into it a cup of the eggs and sugar, and stir it still from, with three tablespoons of sugar. Flavor with vanilla, pour into molds. Use no wet cloth.

CHOCOLATE for the use of the feet the Scientific American says: Many persons are troubled with cold feet. A little chocolate, drunk for a few weeks of the evening, will be found to relieve this trouble, and instead of taking the nightly cooling turn in business, farmers throw away their hacks and abandon sheep-keeping. The consequence will be, a scarcity by and by, and then the pressure will come upon the manufacturers, who, from the lack of material for their factories, will be obliged to pay exorbitant prices, or seek foreign markets. The high prices will then put farmers in a fever again, and at length the usual revulsion will come once more. So owens this chocolate for cold feet, attention, which brings disaster, and prevents proper regard being given to the improvement of our flocks. Half a pound of chocolate will last a family a month. Only this sensible and destructive habit can be cured, and farmers learn to stick to a chosen line of business, through fair weather and foul, we each never hope to become independent of foreign nations, either for our stock or for our wool. Neither can our woolen manufacturers become a steady business, but will always be tempted and discouraged by alternate prosperity and reverses. Wool can be grown at a profit for thirty cents a pound, when mutton can be sold at present prices, and when pastures are so cheap or exotics as in the Far West, half this price will pay a full profit to the shepherd. Instead of abandoning the pursuit it would be a profitable thing to do to improve the flock and make each sheep practice more wool and mutton, which at sold for a less price will bring just as much in money. Wool manufacturers will then be put upon a steady basis, and farmers can afford to laugh at the "Americus Agriculturist."

Principles of Good Farming.

THE letter to examine important facts in the farmers. I can exert land of its, during the principles of good farming. Deep and thorough tillage, compressing into a single short and prevent the gases of insects a page. Thus I carry about my mental pabulum to be digested at the leisure of the plow or hoe. The following are some of those principles:

1. The farmer who would succeed well, and derive pleasure as we can from his calling, must manually active and abiding interest in his vocation. It takes hand-work as well as brain-work pleasant.

2. The farmer must study how best to conserve and maintain fertility in his soils. There is no inertia in agriculture. There must be progress, either forward or backward.

3. The farmer must strive to economize quality, as well as quantity of his crops. It is the quality that commands the price in the end. "Big potatoes" should be his motto in growing roots.

4. The farmer must seek with a settled purpose to improve his natural faculties. It is folly not to develop up the profits.

5. The art of raising better stock is not as well known as it should be. Keep no more animals than you have the facilities to feed and care for well.

6. The farmer must seek to improve his social, intellectual and financial condition.—Exchange.

Farm Implements.

IT is "penny-wise and pound foolish" to buy poor implements because they can be had at a low price. Such implements cost a great deal of time and patience, and in the long run are no cheaper in working order, and then will not give satisfaction. There is a great deal of pleasure in using a machine of simple but of the best make, and therefore it is economical. Such a one does the work in the best manner, and in the long run is the cheapest.

At this present season, when the harvest is over, and the implements used for gathering in the crops are to be housed, it is a good time to look over them, and see what repairs are necessary. Well painted implements will last double as long as those that are neglected. Many farmers are in the habit of leaving their implements in the fields where they were last used, and there they remain, exposed to the storms, until they are again required for use. This is a most injurious practice, and one that should be carefully avoided. Implements so used seldom have the iron oiled to prevent rust, or the wood painted to prevent rot. It is the testimony of all good farmers that time and money spent in painting is much more than repaid in increased durability. Very few farmers can afford to leave such large bodies in their pockets as this careless mess makes. If it is true, as often declared, that farming does not pay over five per cent. on the capital invested, we cannot see how any one can afford such expensive habits; besides, such a style of living exerts a bad influence on one's family and indeed on the neighborhood in which he lives.—J. N. Chapin, in Ohio Farmer.

The Flying Bridges of the Himalayan.

A. WILSON, in his recently published account of a journey through the upper valleys of the Himalaya, says that "at a few miles in Yermont preserved these bridges are constructed of cables, closely from lately trees or bushes twisted together. Two thick cables of these twigs about the size of a man's thigh or a little larger, are stretched across the river at a distance of from four to six feet from each other, and a similar rope runs between them, three or four feet lower, being connected with the upper ropes by more slender ropes running at an interval of about five feet from each other. The implementations of a bridge is that the passenger has no proper hold of the upper rope, which are far too small and rough to be grasped by the hand, and that at the extremities they are so large that it is difficult to have secure hold of both at the same time, while danger is incurred by the bend or hang of the bridge, which in most instances is the middle than at its ends. He has also to step carefully between along, and it is seldom safe for him to rest his feet on the lower rope, except where it is supported by the transverse ends. Notwithstanding the ugging torrent under mouth would be almost certain destruction. The high winds which prevail in the Himalayan during the day make the bridges swing frightfully.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic.

In the absorption experienced here during the summer months the bile taken into the blood in the form of the digestive fluid and prepared for elimination by the kidneys and the skin. In this process the bile is changed in its character, and when the kidneys and skin are sluggish in their action, it remains in the blood, and produces the yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, which is called jaundice. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a powerful stimulant to the liver, and when taken in small doses, a few times a day, will restore the liver to its healthy action. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is also a gentle laxative, and when taken in large doses, will act as a cathartic. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is entirely vegetable, and contains no mercury or other mineral. Directions accompany each bottle. Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is for sale by druggists.

The Enemy of Disease, the Foe of Pain to Man and Beast, Is the Gr

In 1868 Gen. Butler was nominated of the New York delegation at the Democratic National Convention, and, unfortunately, took part in the proceedings. Hence Wm. M. Tweed as Vice President of the convention for New York.

They call him "Samuel J." for reformer. His chief backer at St. Louis with mouth and money, was John Morrissey, the banker and gambler, and one of the chief elements of his strength in the convention that nominated him was, finally, "Boss" John Kelly, Tweed's successor at the head of the New York Tammany ring, who went to St. Louis as his opponent and was brought up by the Tildenites by the promise that he and Tammany shall have the Governorship and offices of New York in the event of Tilden's election.

Mr Tilden has been a politician long his youth up. There is nothing in the life to attract the support any conscientious, honest body of men. He was among the war, when others were fighting he was at home when R. B. Hayes was in front and he has since been the friend of the copperheads and would find them out through mud and fire, right or wrong. He is now on the presidential race on this ground. He is five feet seven inches in height, and is of very slight build, weighing only 110 pounds. Has a bald head.

The Free Press says a compromise may be effected between the two factions in the State Senate, by making Senator Hoyt president pro tem of the Senate for the remainder of the session, and giving the Democrats the Speakership. Yet it is reported in Tilden circles that Governor Hayes cannot appoint Attorney General Devereaux, because Devereaux is a Democrat. Such a report is simply ridiculous.

A correspondent writing from Pinckney, one of Gov. Hayes' home towns, who made Senator Bagley and Bell run for Congress, declares that Hayes is not popular with his own neighbors. He says he could get no Republican to vote for him for Governor in Livingston county.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to direction, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond the point of repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great Rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James and many others, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment a purgative, assisting Aperient in the first stage of the disease, is required, to unload the prima via, or digestive organs; and this should be followed by a course of the Bitters, which will tone the stomach, stimulate the secretions into healthy action, and purify the blood.

Dr. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are a gentle Purgative as well as a tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs in Bilious Diseases.

Purify the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when its impurities cause Headache, Biliousness, Dizziness, Nausea, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, or Kidney Complaint, and you will have no need to suffer. Webster, who has been in the employ of the Anchor Line as Mate, for the past few years, has been appointed to the command of the propeller Arizona, of the same line. The Capt. is both competent and worthy. The Arizona is to run in the lumber trade between Bay City and Erie.

Human Nature Reversed.—A Hayes and Wheeler Club was organized on Saturday evening at Petoskey, with seventy-two members. The following are the officers: President, E. A. Fonce; Vice President, D. C. Nettleton; Secretary A. M. Ross; Treasurer, Wm. Abbott. Meetings on Monday evening of each week. Up and at them, boys!

Pictures.—There are times when, to get good pictures, would be considered a blessing. Pictures of departed ones soften the pang caused by their taking-off, and when but a trifle will procure duplicates of their faces none should miss the opportunity. J. M. Wilcox, of Cheboygan, an experienced photographer, is in town, and may be found opposite this office.

Why don't the "enthusiastic followers of Tilden" organize and show a little of their enthusiasm? We long to hear the shouts of the patriotic reformers. A torch-light procession composed of them would indeed be a grand and inspiring sight as they emerge from the law office and march through our streets. Why don't they enthuse loud enough so that the rest of us will know something about it?

We understand that negotiations between the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw, and the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad companies are now under consideration, to the end that a junction of the two roads be formed, at Melrose, a point about 7 miles south of Petoskey, and from thence both companies to extend and use the same road on to Mackinaw. The route contemplated from Petoskey to Mackinaw, will, we are told, extend to Little Traverse, thus opening up to us facilities for outside communications unexcelled. Our citizens should be alive to the importance of this matter, and not let the road slip by, leaving us to one side.—Little Traverse Rep.

State Senator.

While everybody is naming their Senators, Representatives and Congressmen, we desire to say that we know of no man in this Senatorial District who would do greater honor to the office of State Senator than Fitch R. Williams of Elk Rapids. Added to the fact of his eminent fitness, the right of this portion of the District to furnish the next Senator, we opine he may be considered the coming man.

The Harbor Bill.—The Senate Committee on Appropriations has amended the harbor and river bill so that appropriations for the harbors at Frankfort, Pentwater, White River, Saugatuck and Racine, have been stricken from the bill. The early passage of the bill is probable. The lateness in the season, and the necessity for many preliminaries relating to the Charlevoix harbor improvement, will, and should, we think, throw over the work to another season. The nature of the weather from August 1st to the close of navigation would render the prosecution of the work very unprofitable and uncertain.

—Later.—Advices from Washington state that the bill has passed the Senate.

The Petoskey Democrat has a Charlevoix correspondent. We deem it our duty as a disseminator of general information to announce the fact, affecting as it does, vitally, our village and society. It is the happy privilege of said correspondent to disclose to the many fevered readers of that journal startling truths as they are disclosed to him through the combined labors of a far seeing eye and giant intellect. He has disclosed the fact in his last production that "school trials are in office, and, as a result, Charlevoix county is full of disaffected Republicans and enthusiastic followers of Tilden, and that the county will surely give a Democratic majority. Let us add a few facts: By persistent and continuous labor, nights and Sundays included, the correspondent has secured upon his paper twenty-eight names, among which are those of Republicans, put there without authority. Upon the Hayes and Wheeler list are already over sixty names, and as many more coming. This is an sample of the situation throughout the county. We are glad indeed that Charlevoix is so truthfully and candidly represented in the columns of that high-toned journal. We shall watch closely for further disclosures.

A Disaster from Milwaukee says the propeller St. Clair, on Lake Superior, was burned on Sunday night, and that twenty-seven passengers perished in the flames.

At Carlisle, Kentucky, on the 4th, a Mr. Kirkpatrick compelled a man to take down a Union flag which he had hoisted over his building. And that same mob hurraed for "Tilden and Reform."

How the Democrats do wise that Tilden had less record, particularly as a scheming railroad attorney, and as the consignor and bosom friend of Boss Tweed in his palmy days of plunder.

Tilden has among his various items of wealth and property, an interest in a whiskey distillery at Lebanon Springs, N. Y., it being owned and operated by the firm of "Tilden Bros."

The sheriff who let Boss Tweed slip through his open fingers, is hurraing for Tilden. The "Reform" Governor expressed his purpose to dismiss the sheriff for letting Tweed escape. But he never did it, and the faithless official is Tilden worker.

Tilden is receiving the support of nearly all the whiskey manufacturers. They think because he is part owner of a distillery that has been in the "crooked" business, he will be light on 'em when he gets into the White House. He knows how it is himself.

Mr. Blaine will take his seat in the Senate as Mr. Morrill's successor, when his health is restored, and in September next his vacant seat in the House will be filled by a special election. Possibly, with his improved physical vigor, his transfer to the Upper House of Congress will be grateful to Mr. Blaine, but it can neither add to his conspicuousness nor afford equal opportunities for public service to one whose brilliant capacities especially qualify him for the leadership of a popular Assembly like the House.

A Short Sketch of a Beautiful Northern Town.

Mr. Editor:—Having spent a few days in Charlevoix, please allow me space in your valuable paper and I will give your readers some idea of the situation, business and prospects of this place. Northern Michigan Charlevoix is on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan at the head of Grand Traverse Bay. In Charlevoix county, and in the part of Michigan known as the Grand Traverse Region. It is pleasantly located on the bank of Round lake (a beautiful lake) and sheltered from the winds of Lake Michigan by a high bluff. There is one public house, one large lumber mill and

The Centennial celebration in Philadelphia on the 4th was a grand and successful affair. CUSTER!

Daily Journal of Capt. Walter Clifford, 7th Infantry.

Saturday, June 24—Pulled out of camp one mile below Fort Pease and marched four miles up the river, where we found the steamer Far West lying abreast of the 2d Cavalry camp, and just below the mouth of the Big Horn. The 2d Cavalry had gone into camp at this point last night, and were waiting to be set across the river for an advance up the Big Horn river to the "Rosebud Big Horn," where we are to form a position with Custer for an attack on Sitting Bull, who is reported to have at least three hundred lodges and about one thousand warriors. Very soon after our arrival the Far West moved to across the river, each company of infantry with four pack mules, and the Cavalry companies six mules each, in wagons. Marched four miles up the Big Horn and camped on Tullock's Fork, under a perpendicular wall of rock. Indian scouts came in and reported buffalo coming with Indians sticking in them, and an abundance of fresh pony tracks.

Sunday, June 25—Pulled out of camp at 5:30 a. m., and marched up Tullock's Fork two miles, thence across the mountains to the Big Horn. A terribly still, hot, stifling day, the men suffered terribly from thirst; not a drop of water to be had for eighteen miles; many of the men fainted. I gave out the water I had in my canteen to the men of my company, thinking that we would reach water sooner. The last I had in my canteen I was just about to drink, when one of the men came up and asked if could give him a drink, and as they had all had a very hard march I gave it to him, and before we came to water my throat was crack'ing. When we reached water we made a halt of about an hour and then marched up the river two miles. The cavalry had already gone ahead, and we found them just putting out again; information having been received that a large village had been discovered fifteen miles up the river. The Infantry being exhausted had orders to go into camps, and follow at four o'clock the next morning was raining quite hard, and the camp was not a pleasant one.

Monday, June 26—Pulled out at 4:30 a. m. The packwagons being wet caused us considerable delay, and they caused us still more on the road. As the ropes dried they would slip, and down would go the packs under the mules' belly. Overtook the cavalry twelve miles from the last camp. They had wandered about the night before, losing themselves, and were finally compelled to go into camp. The Crow scouts had come in thoroughly demoralized, and we found the cavalry very much excited over the intelligence the scouts brought. They reported that Custer had attacked the village and had been annihilated. One portion of his regiment had attacked the upper, and Custer himself the lower part of the village. They (the scouts) declare that they never saw so many people together before. They left Custer completely surrounded by Sioux, and thick as they could stand, while the party at the upper part of the village had been driven into a point of timber, completely surrounded, and the timber set on fire. That the smoke we could see some twenty miles away was that of the burning timber. They report three of their number killed and three missing, and were so thoroughly demoralized that they have deserted us in a body, taking the interpreter with them. The Little Big Horn was in plain sight, and the many of the men were still suffering from the effects of yesterday's march, when they heard that there was every probability of that we would be into a fight before night, they marched off at such a pace as to keep the horses in a fast walk. Upon reaching the Little Big Horn the infantry were obliged to strip and wade in cross it. Here we staid two hours, giving time to make coffee. It was at this point that Custer agreed to meet Terry and Gibbon, and as they did not believe the story of the scouts, they were at a loss to account for the non appearance of either himself or a messenger. None of us can believe that he has been whipped by the Indians. Resumed the march at 4 p. m., and made ten miles by sundown. Went into camp on the open prairie, and just as we had unsaddled and established camp a large party of Indians made their appearance on the bluffs on our right. A company of the 2d Cavalry was sent up and the Indians moved slowly off. I have just learned, that Taylor and Bamstock (white scouts) had each been offered $200 to carry a message to Custer. They started about four hour ago and have just returned with the information that a very large body of Indians are moving across the Little Big Horn valley from the direction of Tullock's Fork toward the Big Horn, and now the supposition is that these fellows were lying in wait for us in the pass between Tullock's Fork and the Little Big Horn, and as they could not catch us in that trap have concluded to scatter. Taylor says he was within hail to be a party of cavalry, and when they discovered him Bloody Knife was selected and sent out to meet him. Upon hearing him cursed them and commanded him and in a savage and fight at him. He returned the fire, and then pursued on his horse and escaped. We lay down full of anxiety for Custer. I forgot to mention that soldiers were around the river Lt. Bradley, 7th Infantry in charge of the Mounted Detachment of Infantry, has sent in five Indian prisoners, which surely indicates that there is something a stir.

Tuesday, June 27—Broke camp at 7:30 a. m. and started on the march soon yesterday. Quite a number of ponies were picked up. Upon reaching the top of a bluff about two miles from last night's camp could plainly see two Crow Indians on a hill a mile or so beyond in the bottom timber. Capt. Ball, of the 2d Cavalry, whistled some signal, when soon about fifteen Indian scouts appeared on a run, but we could not tell as yet. I have had some little experience in Indians, but could not understand the kind of Chase that appeared to exist here. Nearing the two lodges we found the ground strewn with Indian camp equipage, and piles of lodge poles tied together ready for packing. Attaching to the lodges we found a number of fine Indian ponies lying in a corral close by them. In one of the lodges we found three dead warriors, and for by the other one all told out in state, wrapped in beautifully dressed robes, mud boots, leggings and embroidered moccasins, looking as if picked up a part of each. Had they evidently belonged to a cavalry officer. Another picked up a buck skin coat with "Terry, 2d Cavalry," marked in the lining, a brand new top right across running and under the right shoulder, as if it was recently stained. Now we began to find several saddles, and can realize that there may be some truth in the report of the Crow scouts and that Custer's force had been severely punished. Just then like a thunderbolt came a report from Lieut. Bradley, who was on the Hills on the opposite side of the river, that he had discovered the dead bodies of one hundred and ninety-six white men, and the question arose on all sides, "Where is Custer?" Our cavalry was about four miles ahead, in plain sight. Suddenly we saw them dart into the timber out of sight, as I almost simultaneously we saw a body of horsemen appear on the high bluffs encamp hill, and about opposite the cavalry. In a few minutes Capt. Bradley, 7th Infantry, who was with the advance guard, came in with the intelligence that the men on the hills were the left wing of Maj Reno and about 300 men. He knew nothing of Custer, and was not aware of his fight. He had charged the upper part of the village with three companies of cavalry had been repulsed, and, in point, Capt Benteen, who had been left in charge of the pack train with four companies, reached the field near the close of his repulse in time to cover his retreat, or those three companies would have been "potted out" of existence. In this retreat Lieuts McIntosh and Hodgson fell. Major Reno reaching the hill top joined with the other four companies, and here they had a most desperate fight, the Sioux charging in within twenty yards of them. The cavalry had finished Custer by the time, and they turned their whole attention to Reno. His position was about four hundred yards from water, and surrounded by thousands of the best horsemen in the world. It was almost certain death to attempt to reach the river, but water they must have, and so, with one party charged the Sioux, another made a break for a deep ravine that led to the water's edge. Those going to water were completely hidden when they arrived within twenty feet of the river. Catching up a camp kettle they would make a rush for the water, dip it full and dash back again; but more a poor fellow was scalped out on the plain. But for our arrival every man of these seven companies would have been scalped, as they were completely surrounded by thousands of Indians, who were picking out poor fellows off one by one. Going over Custer's battle ground, four miles below this point, we found the bodies of Custer and his officers. A survey of the field will settle in the extreme. Custer lasted on all but Custer ate brutally mutilated. He is stripped only. Capt. Keogh had not scored his neck as Gibbon Dye pictures the badges suspended by a golden chain, and indicative of his rank as Major. Among

A SMALL engine propelled by electricity is an object of curiosity to visitors.

The specimens of butterflies in the Brazilian exhibit excite the wonder of visitors.

The American display of jewelry is fully equal in design and workmanship to any foreign exhibit.

DIPLOMAS of the juries of award have been received at the Agricultural Department for the aquarial display.

CANADA has erected a beautiful arch at the entrance of its exhibit, which forms quite an object of interest in the British section.

The display of Canadian insects is said to be one of the finest at the Centennial, affording an excellent opportunity for study.

AN Memorial hall is a beautiful mosaic representing the "Ruins of Pæstum;" it is composed of 700,000 small cubes of enamel.

AN object of immense interest in the Italian department is a table inlaid with mother-of-pearl, representing Milan Cathedral by moonlight.

IT is said that one-half the exhibitors at Machinery hall and Agricultural annex in the Main building will be awarded bronze medals.

The exhibit of the Portuguese colonies of Africa has quite a prominent place in the Agricultural building, and offers an interesting and instructive display.

IN the Russian exhibit can be seen a mosaic taken from the Temple of Dionysius of Carthage. It originally formed part of the floor of the temple, and is at least 2,000 years old.

A PHILADELPHIAN who visited a turbaned Mussulman distributing cigarettes on Chestnut street, a few days ago, was horrified at the exclamation: "Rast ye wawl; do ye take me for a rais Turrick?"

IN the Hungarian department is a round floor, composed entirely of clear and clouded amber and valued at $8,000. It is said to be the most expensive piece of work of this description in the world.

VENEZUELA exhibits at the Centennial forty varieties of fruit preserved in their natural state by alcohol; also specimens possessing the color, taste, and, it is said, all the nutritive properties of cow's milk.

The medical department on the grounds has received orders from the Centennial authorities to withhold all privileges from reporters, on the strict plea that the publication of this sort of information would tend to keep people away from the Exhibition.

A CURIOUS reaper from South Australia is shown in Agricultural Hall, of the Centennial. There are no knives about it, the heads of grain being smoothed off after passing between long spiked teeth upon a revolving cylinder and deposited in a grain bin.

AT a meeting of foreign exhibitors at the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, the other day, a resolution was adopted declaring that the present commercial relations with regard to the sale of goods to foreign exhibitors at the Centennial Exhibition are injurious to the interests and also to the prestige of the country. A committee was appointed to present the matter at Washington, and shortly prepare a memorial.

The W. Brown, writing of the Exhibition in the Atlantic, remarks: "I venture also people of culture in this region who would sign a petition asking the Government to change the language on the placard on the clothes of the Father of his Country, which now reads: 'Coat, Vest and Pants of George Washington,' whereas it is his breeches' waistcoat which is meant and his 'small-clothes' breeches' pantaloons were those unknown, anti-pants' were undressed of to a generation which had time to be decent and comely in its dress."

PROF. BELL'S invention, by means of which any desirable number of messages can be telegraphed over a single wire in either or both directions, was recently tested before the judges. The apparatus operates by the conversion of sound into electricity and its reconversion into sound. Its inventor claims for it the possibility of telegraphing the sounds of the human voice or any other sounds, and demonstrated his claim by sending audible messages, pronounced by himself or owned the judges through the wire, which were received with all the distinctness of the original utterance.

Bedouin Robbers.

"To rob an enemy is heroic, and is celebrated in many of the Arab songs. He who is bold and skilful in this way is held up to the youth as an example for imitation. The exploits of such exploits inspire the same spirit of emulation which the stories of George Washington and his hatchet, and of Benjamin Franklin flying his kite to catch the lightning, do in our boys.

Camel stealing is practiced more generally than other kinds of robbery, owing to the facilities which the sale gives. Camels are of great value, and find become empty of color, and he thought it unnecessary to mix more. This pottery is very highly glazed, and resembles in texture our ordinary milk-pans and bean-pots.—Appletons' Journal for July.

Leap Year Fun.

A CORRESPONDENT describes a curious and amusing feature in fashionable life among the mountains of Switzerland. A party was devised by some American girls, which was to combine the attractions of leap-year with the sport of April fool's day. The ladies clubbed together, and bought a species of coarse mastin through which nothing would show, and each lady took a dress to make, trimming it with her own lace and ribbons and flowers. The dresses were returned to the market at the end of the evening. The object was a leap-year party. The gentlemen were to be dressed as ladies, and to behave as ladies; and the ladies were to affect a masculine semblance and appearance, and were to behave like men—not a difficult feat to many Americans of whom I have heard. The ladies wore black dresses and wigs, false beards and mustaches, etc., and white cravats, and an imitation of short fronts; while the gentlemen wore the dresses made by the ladies, to which I have just alluded. All this took place at one of the fashionable hotels in a sheltered spot among the mountains, and on the first of April. My informant, who is over six feet in height, and looks even taller by it, on his shoulders, wore a miner's morning-dress, he told me, trimmed with white lace, and a Louis XV. white wig, with a red rose in it, white gloves and a fan. He added: "We sat round the room just like ladies, smirking and chatting, and waiting to be asked to dance," which would indicate a low opinion of women's graces. These fictitious ladies were presented with bouquets, and my friend received a card-case from one of his partners, and an eye-glass—which she had worn during the masquerade—from another. Coffee with salt, and cake full of wool, were handed round to the guests, followed later by stem realities. The dancing was wild, it appears, for the modest sex could not manage the trains which women twist about with infinite dexterity, and the ladies' chain was therefore broken at every moment. Some of the gentlemen could bear the indignities of their disguise no longer, and retired to assume their ordinary appearance with infinite relief. But how April fool's day was kept on the Swiss retreat by a cosmopolitan company, composed of Russians, Americans, Poles, Germans, Italians and "Britishers."—N. Y. Home Journal.

A Mother's Devotion.

TUESDAY afternoon a picnic was given at Anderson Island, opposite Georgetown, by an organization of twenty known as the Westend Sociables. A large number of persons were in attendance, and the boat plying between the island and the city was loaded with living freight each trip. The boat is propelled over the course by a line stretched across the river, and at the islands a very narrow and imperfect structure has been placed there for a landing. So inconvenient is the pier that it is with the utmost difficulty that women and children can disembark with safety; and although of late there have been but few accidents reported as having occurred at this place, there was expected a crowd on Monday afternoon which was truly thrilling in each detail, and but for the intervention of Providence would have proved fatal. The water at the pier is quite deep, and a swift current sweeps around the rocks upon which the landing is built with the velocity of a railroad. On the afternoon in question a party, consisting mostly of ladies and children, crossed over to the island, and when the landing was reached, prepared to disembark. A lady, whose name could not be learned, with her baby in her arms was among the first to get out. As she stepped forward the boat moved slightly, and her child was thrown from her arms into the whirlpool below. The little one sank instantly and was being rapidly carried away, when the mother, with heroic presence of mind threw off her bonnet, sprang into the water, and grasped her darling just as it was sinking the second time. Battling fiercely with the strong current, she managed to gain headway, and amid a scene of the wildest excitement reached the shore, and was received by the shouts of a number of persons who had assembled there. The mother and child were taken in charge and well cared for, dry garments procured, and an hour afterward appeared as comfortable and happy as though nothing unusual had transpired. The excitement and rush among the inmates of the boat at the time can only by sparing after her infant cause it was carried, and will appear all the more appropriate when his record is fully vindicated. Samuel J. Tilden caused considerable brilliant applause R. B. Hayes.—Washington Chronicle.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

THE ratio of illiteracy to the total population of Massachusetts is larger than in any other New England state, being rather over one in every twenty.

LIKE the Illinois Penitentiary, the state Prison at Auburn, N. Y., contains more prisoners now than ever before, the number at the latter place being 1,453.

CARE should be exercised in handling carbolic acid, as in certain cases it is an active poison. A saturated solution of carbolic acid in alcohol, with an equal quantity of water, rubbed into a scratch on a cat's nose, has killed the animal almost as promptly as prussic acid would have done.

IT is rather remarkable that human iron slags are always found on the tops of hills, and never in a valley, where water power could have been utilized to effect a draft. Hence it is inferred that the Romans never used bellows, but that they employed the natural draft of the wind in some way. The inhabitants are told bullets or shells were dug out in the hill-top, in which a long tunnel was driven from the side of the hill, against which the prevailing wind blew. Through this open passage, and nothing else, the furnace there would be a strong draft, which could have been utilized for blower purposes—a very inefficient method, if calculated with great loss of iron, which must have been left in the slag.—N. Y. Sun.

ONE of the easy things of this world which are not often found in these times, is the lumber manufacturing establishment near New Cumberland in this State, where the carbon is formed by burning numerous jets of natural gas against slabs of soapstone, suspended over the flame. The firm have five lines of pipe containing two thousand gas burners, all supplied from a gas well that presents no indication at present of failing. The collected carbon is scraped off every twenty minutes by a sliding knife under which hangs a car to receive the substance, the whole operated by a small engine requiring the attendance of but one man. As about two hundred pounds of product are secured daily which sells for seventy or eighty cents a pound, the concern may be looked upon as a small bonanza.—Wheeling (W. Va.) Standard.

THE strawberry season has been a little longer than last year, and has been of some profit to the growers. There have gone into market from the Delaware peninsula, over the Delaware Railroad, about 1,750,000 quarts of strawberries since the opening of the season on May 29. In the transportation of these berries there have also been required the greater part of the season. Of car-loads there were about 785, of which 552 were consigned to Jersey City, 35 to Boston, and 15 to Philadelphia, the latter being estimated; the other cars were billed to quarts, the quantities delivered to these cities were: To Jersey City, 3,312,000; to Boston, 210,000; to Philadelphia, 90,000. New York was also largely supplied by the old Dominion Steamship Company from Lewes, which carried probably not less than 1,000,000 quarts, giving 5,250,000 quarts as the entire market-table product of the peninsula, exclusive of the quantities sold to the boat markets. The average price is thought to be a fair average of the prices obtained, and if we deduct from this four cents a quart for the cost of the cultivation and marketing of the crop, we have left a margin of three cents as the net profit to the growers. Applying this figure to the quantity shipped, we have as the net profit of the strawberry yield, for the season now closing, $173,250. In other words, the strawberries have brought to the peninsula farmers this quantity of money, the effect of which has been especially felt in all the rural districts, as the crop was distributed everywhere.—Wilmington (Del.) Commercial.

The Nomination of Tilden.

The nomination of Gov. Tilden completes the triumph of the Eastern Democracy. Of all the candidates before the Convention he was the most distasteful to the West. His nomination is equivalent to an abandonment of Ohio and Indiana, and a confession on the purpose of the Democracy to make the fight in New York and the East. If Mr. Hendricks or any other popular Western candidate had been nominated, Republicans would have felt that they had hard work before them in Ohio and Indiana. With Tilden there is assured the strength already felt in themselves masters of the situation. The claim put forth for Tilden of being a great reformer is a hardened fraud. He is a political trickster. He stuck by Tweed as long as he could, and never spoke a word in favor of reform until he saw his way clear to power by so doing. He has been identified with every vicious financial, railroad and banking transactions, and has altogether no unsavory record. His selection of "Slippery Sam" has been fully earned, and will appear all the more appropriate when his record is fully vindicated. Samuel J. Tilden caused considerable brilliant applause R. B. POLITICAL ITEMS.

☞ The Democrats of Indiana cannot be bought to support Tilden.—John E. Neff, Indiana Secretary of State.

☞ I believe him least likely of any one of the candidates named to carry New York.—Ex-Judge George F. Comstock.

☞ Anybody opposing Tilden because I have every reason to believe that he can not carry New York.—DeWitt C. Littlejohn.

☞ The London Times expresses the opinion that the utter inability of the Democrats to grapple with the task of suppressing the Government has been unmistakably demonstrated.

☞ Tilden's nomination will certainly throw the control of the Democratic victory in New York, and will, in all probability, mayne the party's defeat.—J. Prague, Pittsburgh Post.

☞ The old glove Democracy, of which Tilden is the chief, have not the confidence and earned obtain the votes of the people. Its nomination will disrupt and disorganize the Democratic party. It means defeat.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

☞ The National Democratic Convention is the greenback Democracy:

"Wheel about and turn about
And do just so you can about
And wheel about and turn about
And do just so."

—Kansas City Times.

☞ Thurlow Weed does not think Tilden would make a good President, even if he could be elected, as he could only be by the union of the Democracy with itself—on the platform of the Cincinnati Convention. Would throw the Government into the hands of the Democratic party of the county.

☞ The New York Times says: "It was the doubtful vote and the Republican stay-at-homes that cheated Mr Tilden two years ago, and the first gone over to the other side, and all Republicans will be ready to claim their own again when New York is of the most illusory character.

☞ As at break of dandelions by
Dew the birds at night away
Keep singing but refresh'd at last
Leaf by leaf refreshed at last
Rise and shine and sing away
Harden and be strong away
By other's favorite Soul

—N. Y. Graphic.

☞ George W. Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly, is exceedingly gratified at Tilden's nomination. He says Tilden is the best candidate the Democracy could have put forward. He says Hayes represents all the principles for which he has been contending for years—reform in the public service; a sound financial policy, and a liberal and just conduct of Southern affairs.

☞ Samuel J. Tilden made an assault upon the frugus of the State of New York to gain the support of a reformer. He now bargains with them for their support for President. It is known to be carried by the people by two-thirds majority, but by 50,000 in the State.—Jacob Hyers.

☞ The New York Herald eulogizes Tilden because "until the war came he made very little effort to augment the fortune." We remember now, when we think of it, that this was the exact position of Abraham Lincoln. Before the war commenced he made gigantic efforts to gain from the Rebellion, but his wife's relatives furnished the substitutes after that, as he knows.—John Minor.

☞ The extraordinary rapidity with which the following, illustrating Tammany's ebb down on their "chin music," and bringing their opponents to their senses—their readiness to work for Tilden, naturally raises the question whether they are following a shattering, their loyalty and defiance in fact their whole vast organization to job and sell and shrewdly calculated to help him to the coveted nomination.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

☞ "But now," joined in one of a group of Democrats who were discussing Tilden, the nominee of the Cincinnati Convention, last evening, on a street corner, "can now be a good candidate for New York, and are" asked another "I mean to me;" joined the doubter, "that he was not altogether too much mixed up in the Boerker scandal to make a strong candidate." It turned out that this intelligent Democrat had often heard about Tilden but never about Tilden, and didn't know there was such a man. This is a true story.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

☞ The Evansville (Ind.) Courier (Dem.) opposed the nomination of Tilden. The Louisville Courier-Journal (Dem.) says: "Tilden will have to carry Ohio and Indiana. With Tilden there is assured the strength already felt in themselves masters of the situation. The claim put forth for Tilden of being a great reformer is a hardened fraud. He is a political trickster. He stuck by Tweed as long as he could, and never spoke a word in favor of reform until he saw his way clear to power by so doing. Hayes.—Wheeling (W. Va.) Standard.

This following, from the Dayton (Ohio) Journal, is decidedly pertinent and suggestive. On the day the committee of which Sam Tilden was a member pronounced the war a failure, Gen. Hayes was leading a victorious brigade up the valley of Virginia, when Gen. Tilden was still the sunniest and genial ally of Bob Toombs, while Hayes was serving in the Union army. Tilden was quarreling with the draft, and lending moral support to those who resisted it, when Hayes enters the White House, Tilden will be laid amid the broken lumber of a treacherous and rickety party platform.

And now the great Democratic reformer, Mr. Tilden, is in danger of being reformed himself, by the Chicago Circuit Court, where suit is now pending against him. He is charged in connection with Louis H. Meyer, with having received and disposed of bonds for which no account has been given, and with appropriating $150,000 for his own use, while acting as trustee and attorney of the Chicago & Alton Railroad. An injunction has been issued restraining Mr. Tilden's delegate from voting at the meeting of stockholders of the road, and requiring him to appear and answer the charges preferred against him. In addition to this another suit is pending against Mr. Tilden in the United States Court for the Southern District of New York, charging him with having swindled the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad out of about $1,000,000. O, Reform! Thy name is not Sammy J. Tilden.

VINEGAR BITTERS
VEGETABLE
PURELY CALIFORNIA
DRAKE'S
VINEGAR BITTERS

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the summer and autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Tumors, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative power in the most obstinate and inveterate cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried to the outside in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed from the system of tendency to worminess, no subsequently will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or at the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins, cleanse it when it is foul, your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

THE NEWS.

AT HOME.

A DARING railroad robbery occurred in Western Missouri on the night of the 5th. A train on the Missouri Pacific Railroad was boarded by a gang of robbers, near Otterville, and the express messenger was compelled to open the safes, from which the robbers obtained about $16,000.—$12,000 from the United States and $4,000 from Adams Express Companies.

EDWARD Y. PARSONS, member of the House of Representatives from the Louisville (Ky.) District, died in Washington, on the 8th, of brain fever.

ON the 8th the Secretary of War addressed a letter to the President giving a history of Indian affairs relating to the Sioux or Dakota Nation. The terms of the treaty, the Secretary says, have been liberally complied with on the part of the United States, and have been observed in the great mass of the Indians, some of whom, however, have never recognized the binding force of the treaty, but have treated it with contempt. In February last the Secretary of the Interior decided the Secretary of War that the time given Sitting Bull and his associates to return to an agency had expired, and that he and his forces still refused to comply with the directions of the Indian Commissioners, and that therefore the Indians were turned over to the War Department to be dealt with by the army. Secy Cameron says the discovery of gold on the western border of the Sioux reservation, and the intrusion of our people thereon, have not caused this war.

ON the 8th Gen Sheridan expressed to Gen Sherman the opinion that there was no occasion to call for volunteers in the campaign against Sitting Bull. With the six companies of the Twenty-second Infantry, then Sheridan says Terry's forces, will number about 2,400 men, and Crook, when joined by Merritt, will have about the same force, which will be sufficient for the movement against the Sioux. Gen Terry's President may also be called upon to verify in regard to the same matters."

AN Augusta (Me.) telegram of the 12th says Mr. Blaine's condition had not improved, and his physician was confirmed in the belief that the original trouble was of the nature of sunstroke. A sea voyage will be urged as soon as Mr. Blaine's strength would bear it.

GOV. HENDRICKS was presented with a formal notification of his nomination by the Vice-Presidency, at Indianapolis, on the 13th. He said he would reply in a few days. It was understood that he accepted.

AT Newark, N. J., on the 13th, three lumbermen named Thaddeus, aged 70, his son, aged 40, and his grandson, aged 20, while resisting an attempt to arrest them, shot and killed one police officer and fatally wounded another. After seriously wounding another man, the trio charged upon a lumbery near by, in Sully on that day reported that certain claims at Bradwood were paying $1,000 per day. As high as $2,700 in one day had been taken out of some of them.

DURING the two months ending on the evening of the 10th, 2,956,106 persons visited the Centennial Exposition, at Philadelphia, and the total cash receipts were $684,590.

DOM PEDRO, the Emperor of Brazil, sailed from New York on the 12th, for Europe, in the steamship Russia.

THE building in New York City known as Castle Garden has been destroyed by fire. It has been in use for many years as an immigrant depot.

A PHILADELPHIA special says that on the Exposition grounds on the 11th seven persons had been overcome by the intense heat, and had to be carried to the hospital in the Landsdowne Valley. Several similar cases occurred on the 12th, and the thermometer stood at 104 degrees in the shade.

A LATE Fort Sally dispatch says the Indians who were in the fight with Custer's troops assert that his remains were shockingly mutilated, his heart torn out, placed in the seat of a pole and the dance held around it, and that the Chief Rain-in-the-Face still had possession of it.

BISHOP EBERLY has been elected Presiding Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, to fill the vacancy caused by the late lamented Bishop Cummins.

AT a special election held on the 12th, Monroe Heath (Rep.) was elected Mayor of Chicago by a majority of about 8,000 over the two opposing candidates.

PRESIDENT GRANT sent a letter to ex-Sec'y Bristow, on the 12th, stating that he had learned that he had declined to testify before the Congressional Committee in relation to the whisky frauds, claiming that what occurred in the Cabinet was a matter of high privilege, and that a committee of Congress had no right to demand its divulgence. While approving of this action on the part of Mr. Bristow, the President said he was released him from all obligation of secrecy on the subject, and adds that "of course not only that you may answer all questions asked relating to it, but also that all members of my Cabinet and ex-members of the Cabinet since I have been President may also be called upon to testify in regard to the same matters."

AN Augusta (Me.) telegram of the 12th says Mr. Blaine's condition had not improved, and his physician was confirmed in the belief that the original trouble was of the nature of sunstroke. A sea voyage will be urged as soon as Mr. Blaine's strength would bear it.

GOV. HENDRICKS was presented with a formal notification of his nomination by the Vice-President, at Indianapolis, on the 13th. He said he would reply in a few days. It was understood that he accepted.

AT Newark, N. J., on the 13th, three lumbermen named Thaddeus, aged 70, his son, aged 40, and his grandson, aged 20, while resisting an attempt to arrest them, shot and killed one police officer and fatally wounded another. After seriously wounding another man, the trio charged upon a lumbery near by, in which they used deadly weapons, severely injuring two workmen. The operative, escaping from the thick clouds of terror and confusion, and armed with the carrying of the Riot Act, drove the gang to the factory and pursued them some distance to the bank of the Passaic River, into which they plunged and escaped by the hedge of escape. There the infuriated populace assailed them with stones and other missiles, and the three men were killed in the river.

THE Prohibitionists of Illinois met in State Convention at Chicago on the 13th, and nominated a State ticket and adopted a platform of the National Convention. James P. Simpson, of Greene County, is the candidate for Governor, and A. Y. McCormick, of Alabama County, for Lieutenant-Governor. Electors-at-Large were also nominated.

THE Republican State ticket in North Carolina is headed by Thomas Settle for Governor, and W. A. Smith for Lieutenant-Governor.

UP to the night of the 13th, nothing had been received from Gen. Crook (Gen. Sheridan was in constant communication by telegraph with Fort Fetterman, the nearest point to where Crook was supposed to be operating.

SPEAKER KERR wrote to a Washington friend from Alum Springs, Va., on the 13th, that he was slowly but substantially improving in health.

ABROAD.

AN explosion of fire-damp took place at a colliery near St. Avold, France, on the 9th, which killed forty-five persons and caused serious injury to forty-seven others.

DISPATCHES from Semlin (a small Austrian frontier town of the 9th report the defeat of the Servians under Gen Ollim pics. A Vienna dispatch of the same date says the Servians had been defeated in every engagement so far, except one. At Ujelina several thousand Servians were wounded. The Servian Minister of War had taken personal command of the army. A Belgrade telegram to a London paper of the 10th says the Servians had fought ten engagements during the preceding eight days and lost 5,000 men.

THE United States Consul at Sue Domingo reports that an insurrection was recently offered the United States flag at that port by Hayden troops, who forcibly took a passenger, under the protection of such flag, from the steamer Tybee.

THE German squadron left Salonica on the 10th with sealed orders to be opened at sea. A Constantinople telegram of the 10th reports that a great battle had been fought at Piret on that day. The Turkish army had been withdrawn from Suliebar, having failed to force the position and their flanks being threatened.

News was received at Ragusa from Turkish sources, on the 11th, that a battle had been fought at Podgoritza between the Turks and 5,000 Montenegrins, in which the latter were defeated, losing 400 killed and 600 wounded. A Turkish gunboat had shelled the town of Nonsuky, which had been previously captured by the Servians. The Khedive of Egypt had sent 5,000 men to Constantinople and would shortly increase the contingent to 10,000. SERVIANS advices of the 12th say a force of 5,000 Turks had been defeated in the preceding day in an attack on Kersanze and Turbiza, and been compelled to embark on steamers on Lake Semarl. The Turkish loss was said to be 400 and that of the Montenegrins 100. Sixty Servians belonging to one regiment had been shot for cowardice at Nisch.

A LONDON telegram of the 10th says John Edward Cooke, a stockbroker, had failed with liabilities of $980,000 and assets amounting to $42,000

AN EDINBURGH (Scotland) dispatch of the 12th, says Disraeli, the British Prime Minister, had taken the direction of foreign affairs, to a large extent, into his own hands

ACCORDING to a London telegram of the 12th, a large number of wounded Servians were lying in villages on the river Sane and Morava, mostly uncared for, owing to the lack of hospital supplies.

CONGRESSIONAL.

ON the 7th, bills were passed in the House to provide for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation in Nebraska; to remove the political disabilities of Gen. D. C. Bumgard, of New Orleans. A resolution was adopted requesting the President to inform the Senate whether the Sioux Indians made any hostile demonstrations prior to the expiration of their treaty reservation in 1868—not only that you may answer all questions asked relating to it, but also that all members of my Cabinet and ex-members of the Cabinet since I have been President may also be called upon to testify in regard to the same matters."

AT Newark, N. J., on the 13th, three lumbermen named Thaddeus, aged 70, his son, aged 40, and his grandson, aged 20, while resisting an attempt to arrest them, shot and killed one police officer and fatally wounded another. After seriously wounding another man, the trio charged upon a lumbery near by, in which they used deadly weapons, severely injuring two workmen. The operative, escaping from the thick clouds of terror and confusion, and armed with the carrying of the Riot Act, drove the gang to the factory and pursued them some distance to the bank of the Passaic River, into which they plunged and escaped by the hedge of escape. There the infuriated populace assailed them with stones and other missiles, and the three men were killed in the river.

THE Prohibitionists of Illinois met in State Convention at Chicago on the 13th, and nominated a State ticket and adopted a platform of the National Convention. James P. Simpson, of Greene County, is the candidate for Governor, and A. Y. McCormick, of Alabama County, for Lieutenant-Governor. Electors-at-Large were also nominated.

A BRILLIANT meteor passed over Marshall the other evening, in a direction from the southeast to the southwest—a very fitful degree north of west. It was brilliant, lighting up the whole country, apparently a half mile high, and passed with a rushing sound like that of a rocket. Its path was nearly horizontal, and it required a sensible instant for its disappearance. The sky was very clear, and the smoke left in its track could be distinctly seen for a few minutes, as it was lighted up by the rays of the moon, which was below the horizon.

Pomeroy on Tilden.

This is what Brick Pomeroy says about Samuel J. Tilden

In 1868 we went to New York city and were told by Boss Tweed that a Democrat must support any Democrat who was nominated, no matter what the character or conduct of the man!

Boss Tweed was a thief. He was the one who dictated nominations for years in New York. He stole millions of dollars. He was aided by other thieves who stole millions. He selected the tools all over the State to do his dirty work. Samuel J. Tilden was for nine years the pet tool of Tweed. He stole himself rich, became a millionaire and always preached that a Democrat must support a Democrat, if nominated for office, no matter if the nominee was a thief and a murderer.

In New York thousands of Democrats denounced us for our letter opposition to Tweed, some we think. Our duty is to honest men, not to stingy political plunderers. The power that inspires our hearts guides our pen. We believe in principle—in honesty, and not in that paltry love of cowardice which sends weakness on its knees to beg favor of criminals.

The same power that in 1872 pimped and paid for the nomination of Greeley is now striving to nominate Tilden for the same purpose. To be baited that there may be a change in the management of business. We know the game of them. We know it now, and will be no party to the betrayal and sale of Democracy into the hands of its enemies.

The Republicans at Cincinnati broke the machine that was set for Conkling, Blaine and others, and went into the field of quiet for a man who had not for years been working to secure the nomination. The people will not stand faultless work on the part of Democrats. They are tired of ring. They weary of this hot house growing of special candidates and will not vote for Tilden, or any man nominated through the means used for his elevation.

We believe Tilden to be heartless, selfish, dishonest, treacherous and all unfit for the position his money backing is crowding him toward, but which he will not reach. We do not wish to see him President any more than we do the more unfortunate members of the gang he betrayed when he could not be safely with it longer. We believe what we believe just as much as God believes what He believes, and will lose every subscriber we have before we will dishonor our conviction of right, or advise one man to vote to elevate to power a man we know will prove false to every trust, and will seek, not the good of the people, but to enrich his agents and lead the people further into the depth of panics and slavery to the money power whose tools are legion.

"Gath" gives one of the best analytical sketches of Tilden's character that we have encountered thus far. Tilden is at once thorough and cute, small and profound, mean and mighty. In short he is an almoner, a Mordecai, a bottle washer sitting in the receipt of customs and genned to the coat tails of statesmen—a kind of wheelbarrow to greatness. It cost Tilden $15,000 to be elected, after years of struggle, to the State Senate. The politicians whom Tilden sought to cultivate regarded him as a nuisance, a house fly, an undertaker—necessary to have around at times, but still a nuisance. He sought the Governorship. The Democrats said, "for heaven's sake, let him have it and get beaten—that will shut him up." Tilden went to work like a rat. By the most assiduous devotion to the task, he literally outlanked Gov. Dix, to the surprise of all. He did it by fair means and foul, by the use of money, men and promises. Tilden is a small bitter partisan, unscrupulous and darling. "Gath" makes the following good point: "Tilden is funny to look at and funnier as a reformer than in any way. He is such a reformer as the clown Grimaldi, who lived at the time of the No-Popery riots. Other people wrote on their doors, "No Popery." Grimaldi wished to take a wide range and wrote, "No Religion." Now, perhaps Tilden may be so complete a reformer as to hazard on his doorplate "No principle."

Ask a Democrat what Tilden has done to merit the title of "reformer" and he will say: "Why, he broke up the canal ring and—and—well, he broken up the canal ring." That is the sum total of their claim. They base their hopes of Democratic succession upon the effective work done by their champion against those men who degraded New York by dishonesty administration of canal interests. Facts disprove the claim thus set up and the Democratic party lies side shuck that unconscious lawyers have told the people, in the Attorney General's office of New York, of $1,000,000 or so which have come into State Treasury. These dollars were legal and of course proper—as they were recovered from thieves in the name and on behalf of the people. All attempts to settle away have been resisted and the stand now on the charge is not cash. The charge is that Tilden, when he was governor, and the people of New York generally, did all in their power to compel the payment of the money which was justly due the State, and to punish those who wrongfully withheld it. Cash to these gentlemen of bargain is the former and to that the Democrats ask the people to cast him. Pomeroy and restore to power the party that was instrumental in plunging this country into the horrors of civil war.

The Democratic party has passed both Houses of Congress, and only awaits the President's signature to become a law. It will give to the country all the silver change needed, and the fractional paper notes now in circulation will disappear. The issue of small paper currency is limited by the bill to $50,000,000, but that is probably $10,000,000 more than all the fractional notes now in existence. The effect will also be to bring from its hiding places millions of dollars now there are now hoarded, thus practically increasing the currency and inflating it in a way that cannot possibly injure it, even though the price of silver should remain permanently below that of the paper currency. There has been a great fall in the price of silver in the past few months, and it has probably touched a lower rate than it will remain at. We shall not confidently expect it to rise again, but not to its old standard. The pool-cut is too large for that, and it will require time to be built. It may require time to come. To party exasperate Democrats should never, however, it will be put to new uses, that necessarily be doomed.

Senator Ferry has the Vice President's clean cut Packet and among the many made in earnest and able fight in behalf of Michigan's interest improvements, thus risking the head of the Senate result against him as the most incubicerous of the practicers of the River and Harbor folly-ists passed the House. But which of much it to be gotten for their action of the Senate is problematical as the House is obdurate in power Mr Ferry has the appointment on the conference committee on the part of the Senate. Notwithstanding the opposition as president of the Senate, he proves willing to accept the interests of his state, and finds ways to make the appointment fit.

Hon. John A. Dix, the well known Samuel J. Tilden long ago has known him well. He served with Mr. Tilden as a fellow-Democrat, until the war broke out, and to a certain extent since. Gen. Dix's letters published above, in his letter published elsewhere in one of the Democratic candidate for President. Instead of being a reformer, he is himself as an urgent need of reform as the party which tries to put him in nomination." The Government for the chief office in which he has been nominated, would not now exist if his example during the rebellion had been followed by his countrymen."

The Chicago Times is now a supporter of Shanny Tilden. But only a little time ago its telegraphic st.ff. Louis as hauling him brought about by the free use of "Shanny's shekels." Its editorial columns and that the same mixture—black, red, acted, howled, drank whisky, swore, bit out from the shoulder like the same old slave-driving crowd." As for Tilden the Times predicted his ignominious defeat, and said that "thousands of Americans citizens of intelligence to discuss between the old machine cattle will vote for Hayes."

Tilden's chances are improving in the South. Some the pronunciamento of the Democrats at St. Louis, that the niggers" have no rights that white Democrats are bound to respect, one of the first fruits has been a reversal of the shotgun argument, and the report of killing of fifteen or twenty of the usually black Republicans. Hurrah for Democratic Reform!

The House of Representatives passed a bill giving the widow of General Custer a pension of $50 a month, and it is in contemplation likewise to vote pensions to the families of his unfortunate comrades in the recent Indian slaughter in Montana.

Custer's personal appearance was singular. Col. Newhall, who wrote "With Sheridan in Lee's Last Campaign," describes him thus: "Custer of the golden locks, his broad sombrero turned up from his hard bronzed face, the ends of his red cravat floating over his shoulders, gold galore spangling his jacket sleeves, a pistol in his boot, jingling spurs on his heels, and a posterous claymore swinging at his side, a wild dare devil of a general and a prince of advance guards, quick to see and

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored fecal matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

At a ratification meeting in San Francisco, Hon. John F. Swift addressed a large crowd in the following sensible and clear manner, which was well received and repeatedly applauded:

What's the matter with us?

What's the matter with the country?

What's what's the matter?

It appears all tired and limp.

He hoped he would not be recalled by the committee; but should they see proper to call him again he shall not consent, as at present advised, to testify to conversations held with the President on official business.

Centennial Tree-Planting.

THE report goes from newspaper to newspaper, of a zealous citizen, in one of our Northern States, who has commemorated the Centennial year of our independence by the extensive planting of trees.

We wish the newspapers that chronicle this act of patriotic forethought could inspire their readers with a hearty emulation of them; so that, ere the year ends its course, every locality hold shall have planted its share of trees—shall have given to the future its contribution toward the glorious transcript by refreshing shade, and have added to the number of cottages that shall nestle under the frettet network of green leaves.

Could we devise a letter way for signally commemorating this epoch in our National life? Each tree thus planted would be a living monument of the experience of the past, and a blessing for the future; and by this generous forethought the next Centennial would be celebrated in a land of orchards, of wooded hills, of green lanes, of groves that would be fit temples for the Dryads, of towns hid among arching boughs, of urban and suburban places crowned with sylvan beauty.

In an zealous devotion to the cultivation of trees we should strengthen and perpetuate one of the best characteristics of the American National character. We have sent to the Philadelphia Exhibition the finest of an American village —one of those sin-dimel avenues, with embowered cottages standing back from the highway, which are so abundant in our land—we should have shown our foreign visitors a feature captivating in its beauty, and yet, comparatively our own. The traveling American may feel fresh interest in the narrow streets and quaint old houses of European towns; but the pure novelty of seeration, for the American village is constructed upon a principle that gives it preeminently the palm of beauty and comfort.

Unfortunately, these treed-lined avenues too often stop at the borders of the town; the traveler emerges from embarrassing shade, and for stretches of miles is subjected to the unpleasant sunshine, upon which the summer sun pours down with unintermpted fierceness. How easy it might have been in the years past for the people of the towns to have come together and stretched their avenues of arching boughs from village to village! Had this been done, we would now show our Centennial visitors the most truly beautiful land in the world, for our highways, our lanes, our roads, our rural rivers, our green valleys, have the highest charm of landscape beauty. A mountain without trees at its base, or rising to its sides, is commonly a lumpish mass: a lake whose shores are not bordered with towering monarchs of the forest is deprived of the setting which gives to expanse of water its greatest charm; and a valley that is not broken with orchards, and dotted in its meadows with wide-spreading trees, has no sylvan grace. Especially in a rural picture trees have the first, the last, and the intermediate place in the scale of beauty; other objects set off or vary the picture, but trees have the essential place. A swiftly-running stream, for instance, broken into cascades, is very beautiful when shadowed by trees—but it is nothing if the light does not fall upon its surface broken by interlacing boughs, or if green vistas do not hold it in mysterious depths of shadow.

And trees are almost as desirable in cities as it is upon country by-ways or in rustic villages. It screens the prominder at high noon from the down-beating rays of the sun; it confers wholesomeness upon the atmosphere; it gives seclusion and pleasant coolness to the house before which it shouts; it makes the town fair to look upon; and the true trees alone are grateful to the eye inflamed by the glare of reflected sunlight from the brick walls; it lets into the apartment whose windows it screens a charming, gratified light; it takes, without our aid, life from the air and from the soil, and builds up silently forms of beauty that are almost equal in charms, indeed, to the senses with a generous dower of gifts which we cannot too highly praise.

Too often we are heedless in planting trees, and then complain of our want of success. We should begin by selecting those that are adapted to local climatic conditions, and we should choose only those that are hardy and have long life; and if, after making a careful selection, we simply see to it that the roots are planted in a deep and nourishing soil, we need give ourselves no further concern; the tree makes it own life, and, expanding with the seasons, will cast grateful shadows for many generations of men that follow us.

It is not too late for earnest action in furtherance of our suggestion. Let a few zealous men in every town organize, during the summer, an association pledged to plant, when autumn comes, a hundred trees in symbolical commemoration of the Centennial. We doubt if the patriotic enthusiasm of our people could manifest itself in a better way than this. — Editor's Table, Appletons' Journal for August.

A Faithful Cashier.

A SUFFICIAL life of thirty four years in one position, says the correspondent of the Hartford Times, was closed a few days ago by the death of William Imer Robinson, cashier of the New York Custom House. For fifteen years at least the reputation of the Custom House has been notoriously bad, but during all those years, and the nineteen others which Mr. Robinson had passed in the cashier's office, no breath of suspicion ever touched his character. He was appointed in 1842, and so valuable were his services as cashier that, no matter what other changes were made, his removal was never thought of. During his long period of office the enormous sum of $6,000,000,000 passed through his hands without one cent of loss to the Government.

His death is attributed to the worry of mind he suffered from the unexplained disappearance of a gold certificate for $5,000 from his office several months ago. The money was made good to the Government, but the matter preyed so much on the faithful cashier that his grew ill and gradually sank till death at last took him away. In such times as these it is no small honor to a man to say that he had held a public office thirty-four years, handled $6,000,000,000 of government money, and died with a name above reproach. But Mr. Robinson came of the old revolutionary stock, and inherited its sterling virtues.

A Hateful Habit.

THE attention of medical men in this great Republic is called to the injudicious and absolutely hateful habit, much in vogue in the rural districts and among the poor in the city, of getting up in the night to eat. This nocturnal meal is fatally disguised under the name of breakfast, and there is no doubt that it has much to do with creating, spreading and sustaining the National disease, dyspepsia. The custom is sometimes visited by severe penalties, but nothing seems able to deter its votaries from continuing its practices. Women took summer boarding with a man who used to eat in the night and disused up all his household to share the nutritional meal. One night he stirred us all up at half past four o'clock to eat. We rose and found that every day for a week he modeled himself on a wise tenor, one of his horses let himself out a little snake, a reaping-machine ate up his best farm hand, a distant relative sent his youngest boy a drum, his wife took to writing poetry, and the whole neighborhood inherited and handsome wooden stitled, leaving an unpaid summer's board bill to remember him by. The latter circumstance is probably improved upon our memory, and we often think of it in connection with the somewhat striking coincidence that we have never been in that county since. — Burlington Hawk-Eye.

SOME of the latest styles in millinery are very pronounced and not at all graceful. The hats that turn up high on the left side and are fastened with a feather and roses, are worn on the side of the head in a manner that must appear painful to the height of uniformity. Coarse straw bonnets with flat crowns and trimmed with daisies and dried grass enjoy much favor. A pretty little hat of white straw is the Londen, a fashion much worn by girls. The rim is bound with gray velvet, and this material mingled with ribbon composes the crown and the back forms loops and ends. A cluster of pink roses and a gray plume ornament the side. The shape of the London is somewhat similar to a turban, a round, low crown and the brim turned up all around, but not quite close to the crown. — N. Y. Cor. Chicago Tribune.

CHARLESTOWN, - MICHIGAN.

ISOLATION.

We walk alone through all life's various ways,
Though light and darkness, sorrow joy and change;
And greeting each in each, though passed days
Still we are strange.

We hold out dear ones with a firm, strong grasp,
We hear their voices, look into their eyes,
And yet, beneath each dear clinging clasp
A distance lies.

We cannot know their hearts, howe'er we may
Mingle thought, aspiration, hope and prayer,
We cannot reach them and in vain every
To enter there.

Still, in each heart of hearts a hidden deep
Lies, never fathomed by the dearest soul,
With closest care our purest thoughts we keep,
And isolated

But, blessed thought! we shall not always be
In darkness and in coldness walk alone;
There comes a glorious time when we shall know
As we are known.

BILL WALKER'S WIFE.

SOME one knocked at the door. It was a wild night—the snow falling dreamily around, the air diving away and leaving in its swift swirls down the chimney, bringing a shiver to the children of men. Nobody had never requested him to see Marsh about the appointment, but had Marsh ever intimated to him that he had had to divide with any one. H. T. Crosby, a clerk in the War Department, testified in regard to letters and records of the department relative to Evans' appointment. The defense then announced the case closed on their part, and an order was agreed to that three of the counsel for the defense and three of the managers might argue the case in such order as they might determine on, and the court adjourned to the 20th. A Conference report was made on the Army Appropriation bill, according to which all matters relating to the reorganization of the army were to be referred to a commission consisting of two members of each branch of Congress, the Secretary of War and two army officers, the House having receded from all its amendments relating to the reduction, reorganization and pay of the army, the total amount appropriated by the bill, as agreed upon by the Conference Committee, being $24,000,000—$1,865,500 less than last year. A Conference report was made and agreed to—40 to 30—on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill—the total amount appropriated being $16,370,777—being $973,996 more than as originally passed by the House, and $6,158,581 less than agreed upon in the Senate. . . . A resolution was adopted in the House directing a careful survey of the Union and Central Pacific Railroads. The Senate bill extending the jurisdiction of the Court of the Alabama Claims Commission to Jan. 1, 1877, was passed. The monthly report of the commissioner on the South Carolina election case, but neither member nor thirds in contest, was ordered to be printed. The Conference report on the Army Appropriation bill was agreed to. The bill for the protection of the Texas frontier was reported from Committee of the Whole, and the amendment providing for the payment of the troops shall be in the bonds of the States or service where the public interest requires their continuance was rejected—yeas 79, nays 98.

ON the 20th, in the Senate, a resolution was adopted requesting the President to communicate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any information in his possession in regard to the recent slaughter of American citizens in South Carolina. The House bill to continue Weld Hall in the set to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government, was considered. The Impeachment trial was resumed, and Mr. Blair opened the argument for the defense, and Manager Lord followed for the prosecution, the former claiming that the latter dredging that the impeachment should be discontinued because more than one-third of the Senate had voted against jurisdiction in the case. . . . In the House, bills were passed—for the protection of the Texas frontier; extending to July 31 the bill making temporary provision for the expenses of the government; Senate bill to amend the counterfeiting of trade-marks; and a conference report on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was made and adopted. A Conference report on the bill for the admission of the confederated Osages, Kaws and Missouri Indians in Kansas and Nebraska was not agreed to.

The Silver-Coin Resolution.

THE following is the full text of the joint resolution recently passed by Congress for the issue of silver coin:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as will best secure a just and fair distribution of the same throughout the country, may issue the silver coin at any time in the Treasury to an amount not exceeding $10,000,000, in exchange for an equal amount of legal-tender notes, and the notes so exchanged shall be kept as a special fund, separate and apart from all other money in the Treasury, and be redeemed only upon the retirement and destruction of a like sum of fractional currency received at the Treasury in payment of dues to the United States, and said fractional currency, when so substituted, shall be destroyed and held as a part of the sinking fund, as provided in the act approved April 17 1876.

SEC. 2. That the trade dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

SEC. 3. That in addition to the amount of subsidiary silver coin authorized by law to be issued in redemption of the fractional currency, it shall be lawful to manufacture at the several mints and issue through the Treasury and the several officers thereof such coin to an amount that, including the amount of subsidiary silver coin and of fractional currency outstanding, shall in the aggregate not exceed at any time $50,000,000.

SEC. 4. That the silver bullion required for the purpose of this act shall be purchased from time to time at market rates by the Secretary of the Treasury with any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, but no purchase of bullion shall be made under this resolution when the market rate for the same shall be such as will not admit of the coinage and issue as herein provided without loss to the Treasury, and any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided under the existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage, provided that the amount of money at any one time in such silver bullion, exclusive of such resulting coin, shall not exceed $200,000.

"Bill Walker's wife—bless!—I won't. I thought too much o' him for to like the woman as 'll slight his memory."

"Sailor, you shall have me!"

"I'll leave the house now."

"Sailor, I'll look the door. You shan't leave this room till you say you'll have me for your lawful wife."

"That I'll never do! And, woman! you're a bad lot, that's what ye are—a foul, ungodly creature, and I pity poor Bill from the bottom of my heart—that I do. And I don't believe as these ladies ever thought of him more than ye did."

"If course, they didn't, sailor, of course they didn't."

"Whose babies are they? Who's their father?"

"You are, sailor!"

And then he felt a woman's arms thrown around his neck, and her kisses and tears pressing on his face, and he heard a woman's voice crying:

"Babies! children! wake up and comfort mammy, for daddy's home—daddy's home! And he tried to make mammy believe he was some one else. Oh, Bill! oh, Bill! I knew you all the time, and could hardly keep from kissing you when you told the yarn!"

And the children came running in, stockingless, and in their nightgowns, and were caught, together with them, quilted to Bill While's breast.

The London "Times" on the Celebration of Our Independence.

THE London Times of July 4, referring to the celebration of on mdependence, says:

"No Nation ever offered the privilege of citizenship more liberally, and no Nation was ever rewarded with such rich returns for its hospitality. The especial glory of the growth of the United States has been this, that the Republic has grown revolutionary recruits from all the races of the world, and has flocked to its protection. Sometimes they have fled from the cruel conditions of over-crowded life, at home, like those of which could be had at the door of no man or class of men, since they were the necessary consequences of false ideas universally accepted. At other times true-souled men have fled from the tyrannies of conscription and of feudal law, which kept them bound from the cradle to the grave; sometimes they sought in the New World a liberty to obey the dictates of their own consciences, denied by prelates and governments of the European continent. It is justly a matter of pride that a great people should have thus grown up. The troops of immigrants coming in year after year from Europe, pouring their wealth into unknown regions, and brought from the hidden depths of the earth those treasures of iron and coal which, more than anything else, increase the power of man to appropriate the gifts of nature to its use, of silver and gold we need not speak; the abundance of their production is comparatively an insignificant accident. The way in which these have passed have seen a great industrial community developed with unexampled rapidity. * * *

"The United States have become a great Nation in number and in the production of wealth, and they have shown themselves great also in the capacity to free themselves at the cost of much temporary suffering, from the great evil of slavery, which was so long interwoven in their existence. The spectacle they present to the world of a vast multitude of people peacefully producing food and clothing, and ready to receive within their ranks immigrants from all lands who desire to join freedom is not unimposing. Although man does not live on bread alone, bread is one of the necessaries of life, and—speaking broadly of the Union as a whole—the people of United States bread may always be obtained. If we are impotent that the United States have as yet done so little for the world beyond increasing the affluence of the means of animal existence, we may, perhaps, see cause to restrain our discontent in thinking of the numbers as out of which were collected the armies of immigrants that have recruited the numbers of their citizens. They have for the most part come from those classes of Europe whose whole lives are given up to the daily struggle to obtain the means of keeping alive. By much effort, by savings that may almost seem to be ignoble from their necessity, by resistance to temptation that has often been heroic, the few necessary pounds have been got together to enable the emigrant to sail from Liverpool or Bremen, from Cork or Hamburg, to an Atlantic port, and he has landed penniless to try his fortune in another hemisphere. If the times are fairly prosperous he gets employment, and wages which prove to him that he is indeed in a world which is new. The strength of his manhood, and the help him out remains with him; he saves, he becomes a house-holder, a housekeeper, a landed proprietor; but the memory of his own early struggles and of the struggles of his father before him, does not pass away; and, if he were asked to speak of the land of his adoption, and could put his thoughts into words, he would always describe it as 'a land of fullness of bread.' It takes a generation or two to raise the emigrant above the new satisfaction of material contentment, and the rare development of the United States as a member of the elect nations that contribute something more than material wealth to the treasures of the world is set before it. Into that future we cannot pry, though we have faith that it will come. Perchance a hundred years hence it will yet be only at the dawn."

A Narrow Escape.

MR. H. TAYLOR, who, throughout the news of Custer's defeat in Fort Ellis, traveled the most direct route, the Big Horn he discovered forty Sioux driving a herd of about ten buffalo up the valley, and not wishing to have trouble with them, made a detour for a high hill, and the first thing he knew, whiz went an arrow near his person, when looking in an opposite direction from the Indians with the buffalo, he saw an Indian about sixty yards from him, deliberately drawing on him for a shot, and still beyond, several other Indians. He then made a dash for the river, plunged into it, swam it twice on horseback, the Indians in hot pursuit and shooting, when he discovered a high rock, perpendicular on all sides and inaccessible except at one place, which a man well armed like he was could defend against a good many Indians. Abandoning his horse, he immediately ascended the rock and took possession of it, and soon afforded him protection against the Indians, who spent the rest of the day in shooting at him and trying to catch his horse, but failed. At sunset they left, when he came down from his retreat on the rock, easily caught his horse (which is a good one), mounted him, and continued his journey night and day, arriving at Fort Ellis on the third day from starting. He will remain here till dispatches from Washington arrive for Gibbon, and carry them to headquarters. — Bozeman Times.

Something Novel in Pomology.

A FEW years ago a gentleman living in the suburbs of New York, anxious to have large pear trees that would bear fruit soon, contracted with a tree agent for some Bartletts, the price of which was five dollars apiece. The trees came in due time and were set out. In two years from the time of planting they bore a small, round russet pear, hung on the trees very late in October. About this time the very same agent made his appearance, and, being reminded of the contract to furnish Bartletts, he asked to be allowed to examine the leaves and fruit, the latter still hanging on the trees. He examined both carefully, and audibly musing toward his victim, said with a stern expression:

"Well, sir, where I was born these trees I supposed you were a well-read, intelligent man; but now I am of a different opinion." This very singular remark brought forth the query, "Why?" from the owner. "Why?" was the response from the agent. "to think of a man of cultivate at the day and age who does not know the fact that a Bartlett tree never bears

Who Took Bank Pay. The Louisville Republican says that Gen. Jackson President, Isaac Hill Governor of New Hampshire, Benton, Grundy, and all the rest of other Democratic papers of those times long, keep repeating the statement that Hayes and Wheeler stand for gold bonds and look to coin redemption.

Bill Gov. Hayes was one of Congress when the back salary steal of 1873 passed. When the salaries of Congressmen were raised from $5,000 to $7,500 ; also in 1866, because Representatives were voted and voted against the bill. (See pages 4,289 81, Congressional Globe, July 27, 1866.)

Mr. Wheeler was Legislator. He took pay steal at every stage in 1874, and was the first Congressman to return the money to the treasury. He long ago expressed himself with shame and chagrin to Secretary Bristow, in his letter declaring that he would repay as much of the interest as the salary fell short.

But there was a man in Congress in 1875, who voted against the back salary grab, in order to appeal to the people, had still appealed to the record, came home, and received at a public reception. He is now talking "Hayes" speeches against Hayes. He is Wheeler, 44 miles S. of Antrim Depot.

IN Newark, N. J., there are 1,100 workmen without employment, and great pressing to the city officials for work of in kind.

THE mineral resources of Tennessee have received further development within the past few weeks in the discovery of heavy deposits of carbonate of zinc on Powell's River in East Tennessee. The supply is said to be inexhaustible.

IT is said that a recent examination of the records of the War Department showed that the actual number of men on duty in the army is 20,979, of which 7,969 are on duty in the Territories, 3,718 in Texas, and 3,354 in the other Southern States. Gen. Terry had in the field 1,925 men, and Crook 1,700, of which probably half or more are today in for active service. Four thousand two hundred and sixteen men are on duty at West Point and other points north, and the remainder of the army is doing garrison duty at forts in the Northern states.

ON the 30th of June the Queen Victoria began the fortieth year of her reign. Although four English sovereigns have reigned longer than Victoria, Queen Elizabeth reigned 44 years and 126 days, Edward III., 50 years and nearly five months, Henry III., 56 years and 10 days, George III., 59 years and 4 months. But of course even these long reigns look short by the side of the 72 years of Louis XIV. of France. Probably no two successive Kings of any country reigned over so long a space of time between them as Louis XIV. and Louis XV., who from 1643 to 1774 made up together 131 years, or an average of rather more than 65 years per reign.

THE fact is stated by the Paris correspondent of Silliman's Journal that M. Andrey, who has been so successful in his process of electro-plating with copper the casts from ornamental fountains in the Place de la Concorde, makes his new copper paint from the deposits copper deposited by the galvanic battery. The paint is said to be a solvent of the varnish thus employed is the light and refined petroleum—what is commonly known as benzine. The copper used in the operation is very fine and is easily pulverized. It then is incorporated with the benzine varnish, and applied either to iron, brass, plaster, or wood. When mixed with oils, this copper acquires a green, analogue.

AMONG the many interesting objects in the department of Tunis is a mosaic table, supposed to have been executed during the most flourishing period of the history of Carthage. It is about eight feet long and six feet high and composed of small pieces of stone about half an inch square, and valued at $5,000 in gold.

TWO pictures in the Colorado exhibit afford much gratification. One represents a log school-house, to which is attached this inscription: "Facsimile of the first school-house in Denver or Colorado Territory, opened by Prof. O. J. Goldrick, Oct. 1, 1859, with eighteen pupils, including three half-breed Indian boys and five Missouri children. The other represents the handsome and spacious school buildings now found in every part of the State.

IN the Russian exhibit is a new style of leather coal which would be an excellent article for a large class of Americans to wear in cold and stormy weather. The outside of the coat is of black, soft, smooth leather, while the lining is of cloth, thus combining warmth and imperviousness to wet. The coat is as thoroughly water-proof as rubber, without the objectionable features of that material. The price of such a coat is only $20, and yet one of them would last a man his lifetime, a valuable legacy to become considerably older than Methuselah.

Reform Catechism.

Q—My son, what is ——?

A—A man who always blooms!

Q—Where does a man shout reform?

A—Sometimes when he sees waste in cans—a good thing for tinners sometimes when he's drunk—and sometimes just because others do.

Q—Who is the greatest reformer?

A—Mr Tilden!

Q—What has Tilden hope?

A—Brewed a canal ring.

Q—How much did he bust it?

A—Three score commercial, two patent titles, one continent and one dismissed. Those suits cost the State $100,000.

Q—How many suits are pending?

A—One whole suit.

Q—How much money has been recovered?

A—Not a cent.

Q—What else has Tilden done?

A—Refused bribes.

Q—How did he do it?

A—The Republican Legislature of New York did it for him.

Q—What else has he done?

A—Once upon a time he issued $4,562,684 in shin plasters, properly denounced by a learned Judge, as 'usurious, worthless, [illegible] currency.' He cheated the farmers with it and dodged the payment of duty on it. He also crawled out of paying the sparkle tax on his mining property in the Upper Peninsula for three years when steve Jeanie took him by his neck tie and made him fork over.

Y—Do you think Tilden is a good and good man?

A—No! as great and good as the Almighty, but he ain't any model.

Q—My son, do you think he is a reformer?

A—My father, I'll be dinged if I do.—Lowe Journal.

VINEGAR BITTERS

VINEGAR BITTERS

R. H. McDONALD & CO., Druggists & Gen. Agts., San Francisco, Cal. & Cor. Commerce Street, N. Y.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fortified.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and inveterate cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Painting and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuge, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, - - AUGUST 8 1876

The Albany Journal makes the following point, which every Union veteran should read:

"It should be engraved on the hotels of every man's door post that Tilden formally declared in convention in '64 that 'the war was a failure and must cease.' That declaration was made in the midst of the terrible contest. It cheered the hearts and nerved the arms of the rebels. It induced them to push the struggle through another year, not but to the slaughter of our sons and brothers. This disloyal recreant of '64 — who was ready to surrender the Republic to the hands of traitors has now the effrontery to ask to be made the President of the country which he was then ready to pass over into the keeping of its enemies."

Those who opposed Mr. Chandler in the last Senatorial contest and endorsed Mr. Carpenter, doubtless wish to know how the Senator stands on the great Presidential question. In a letter to a friend in Wyoming, Mr. Christiancy recently said:

"I know Gov. Hayes personally, and have great confidence in both his integrity and his ability. I have no doubt he will make a good President. He is a pure man, opposed to all rings, and next to Brinton, gave me my first lecture. I am entirely satisfied with the candidates and the platform."

Carl Schurz has resolved to bolt the ticket in his den. He is going to stump New York for Hayes and Wheeler.

This we find in the St. Louis Globe: "As for Mr. Chandler, he deserves few words. He is guilty of having been one of the most successful merchants and clear-headed business men of Detroit and since his appointment to the Cabinet he has introduced and entered in the Department of the Interior the same habits and methods which led to success in his private business. Under his administration no one has drawn any salary in the department without working for it, and we challenge the Republican to bring a single specific accusation against Secretary Chandler, or to show a department of public business under Democratic administration that is carried on more faithfully, honestly or efficiently than the Interior Department."

Some of the "reformers" are horrified at the Secretary of the Interior taking charge of the Republican campaign. But the impropriety of Presidential candidate's doing so never seems to occur to them. It is well understood that Mr. Tilden will personally conduct his own campaign. On the best methods of securing a majority after "hearing from the country," no one can beat Mr. Tilden. What he and Tweed didn't learn in their ten years political partnership about superintending a "reform" movement isn't worth telling.

THE rumor is again current of the approaching consolidation of the Detroit Post and Tribune.

Throughout the State of New York the Republicans are organizing in earnest. Hayes and Wheeler clubs are springing up in every city and town, and we have the strongest kind of assurance that the Republicans will certainly carry the State against Tilden, the plain "reformer." Many of the hards de cent Democrats, even, oppose him with vigor.

The employes of the Berkey & Gay Furniture company at Grand Rapids have formed two Hayes & Wheeler companies of 65 men each.

The recent butchery of a lot of unoffending and unarmed negroes at Hamburg has been very aptly styled, "A South Carolina Tilden Ratification Meeting."

It is said that Tilden will, if elected, make John Morrissey his Secretary, of War. The latter being a fighting man, the appointment would be very appropriate. Butler, of Hamburg butchery fame, would do better, though.

A small Illinois girl, who had been severely pitted, rose up in her wrath and recovered $5,000 for breach of promise; and she had no sooner got this sold out of the way than she took some of the proceeds and went right to work on another—a suit been black silk, made after the "Domestic Fashion."

A Washington telegram to the Inter Ocean says President Grant has intimated an intention to veto the River and Harbor bill not merely on account of its objectionable features, but because he thinks it absurd to pass such a bill at this late date, when the season is so far advanced that little or no profitable work can be made of the appropriation this year. This news may be taken with a grain of salt.

The Lansing Republicans have organized a Hayes and Wheeler club, 500 strong. A wide awake company numbering 100 is also enrolled for public parade. The uniform is unique and all fine appointed, the hat being of the conventional style ornamented with a large, showy red, white and blue plume, the cloak is blue and red and white belt runs over each shoulder and under the other. The flambeau lamp is painted red, white and blue, and is of globular shape. It is expected to be joined by similar companies from Detroit August 24, the day before the Republican state convention, and have a grand parade on that evening.

Use C. C. C. Cure in coming to that excellent conclusion. D. B. Dalzell & Co's Best Cleanser, be sure you get what you call for, as imitations of its success have sprung up in numerous in the market. It is better than soda and cheaper and better than Baking Powder.

Every man pays cash or is made to. Dick and Charley by using the Boston Clothing House.

The press in Turkey at the beginning of 1876 was spread entirely two newspapers, of which twenty were in French, sixteen in Turkish, thirteen in Armenian, twelve in Greek, four in Bulgarian, two in Hebrew Spanish, and one each in Persian, Arabic, Italian, German, and English.

Ex Vice President Colfax is already on the stump for Hayes and Wheeler. He says he was in favor of the ticket works before it was nominated and still thinks it the "strongest, most well-equipped, personally, politically, geographically and intellectually" that could have been nominated.

The Sioux Falls have decided to anti-vote the white race. Why not return the compliment?

Grateful Thousands proclaim HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever established the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Imliigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Painters, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter Salt Rheum, Blotches Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when you feel; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

TAKING the United States census of 1870 as a guide for our own country, we find national fevers forming a very important feature of the mortality table. They are most fatal in Florida, Louisiana and Texas. Next in order follow Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Missouri, Kansas and Nevada. In another group, distinguished by a somewhat less mortality, we find New Mexico, the Carolinas, Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Illinois and Indiana. These states marked by the fewest sanitary sufferers are the New England and Middle states, Wisconsin and Minnesota. California there is a considerable ratio of mortality, diminishing rapidly in Utah, and northerly in Oregon and Washington territory, where it augments largely toward the South on New Mexico.—Popular Science Monthly.

THE drift of northern icebergs is with the great polar currents which meet near the coast of Labrador. They are long ones, floated with the current just Newfoundland, frequently striking on the coast, and usually dissolving in the warm Gulf Stream. Some of these icebergs are 400 feet high. The immense mass was struck by the engine and knocked directly across the track. Some fifty-three cows passing over him. He was then tumbled down a bank 300 feet high, over stones and stumps, and just as he got to the edge of the river he struck against a pile-driver that was at work, and, his head laying on the top of the pile for a minute or two, the ponderous hammer descended, striking him on the cheek, bursting his face somewhat. The shock rolled him into the river just as an up-river packet was passing, and, by some miraculous the unfortunate man was entangled in one of the wheels, and whirled round and round for an hour and a half before he was discovered and released. He was picked up nearly drowned and removed to the cabin, where his wants were supplied. After he had eaten a hearty meal he was supposed by the captain, who asked:

"Is there anything you would like to have?"

"No, no," replied the canvasser, "there is nothing but this——"

"What? what?" ejaculated the captain. "what is it?"

THE eight signals now in use in the United States Navy were invented by a woman, and can be seen at the Women's Pavilion.

AMONG the curiosities in the Swedish Department is a Scandinavian pipe, carved and paveled, which was presented to Emperor Swedenborg by his English followers.

A WOMAN applied for admission to the Centennial on one of the turnstiles the other day, but the breadth of her body being nearly as great as the length, it was necessary to open a gate to let her in.—Cincinnati Commercial.

MISS ALLISON, the engineer of the machinery in the Woman's Pavilion at the Centennial, is reported very ill in consequence of overwork and anxiety. Better take the dangerous boy out of the girl's hands, lest she faint when at some critical moment, and the Woman's Pavilion and its engineer be stirred heavenward by steam.—Exchange.

MASSACHUSETTS expends more cash than any State except Pennsylvania, and makes more creditable exhibit. Annually it pays small books contributing to educate all the children of the land, one by one, leaving a vague impression behind. The work done by the schoolbox is very neatly executed, and shows considerable familiarity with the studies.

COMPLAINTS reach us from the exhibitors of steam pumps at the Centennial Exhibition, and also from those who are interested in seeing them operate, that the supply of steam is utterly inadequate to the requirements. The steam furnished is not more than from eight to thirteen pounds pressure per square inch, and this, little as it is, is only disposable from time to time, when for a moment it is entirely shut off, thus depriving the exhibitor of the chance to exhibit and the visitors to witness the operation of the pumps during the afternoon.—Manufacturer and Builder.

IT is a New Orleans lady poet who says:

Fainting with hunger and longing his cave,
Van Bruised a beautiful pumpkin he spied,
And oh! how enchanting were each
All covered with such delightful architraves!
And the fruit so refreshing and cooling within,
But alas! quite too high for his reach!
So they are too green," said the cunning old sly,
"It's only for fools I don't wait such—and it!"
Thus with the canonical whers money doth fail,
We hear not the truth, but a silly make-take.
That man's worth seeing," she I wouldn't go
To see such a crowd—it would trouble me so!"
Why me since the fact and the fable is by,
One party only has been true,
He promised what I sought to do,
Or make rotten in proper due—

CAMPAIGN ITEMS.

☞ Texas is reliably Democratic and here is what a reliable Texas Democratic paper says about the party rule: "the government is coarse, and our laws are a mockery.

☞ The Memphis Avalanche (Dem.) frankly confesses: "We were inclined to believe that time Hayes was a negative character, but there is more positive self-assertion shown in his letter than has been shown by any candidate for President in the last quarter of a century."

☞ Once upon a time Gov. Hendricks, Democratic candidate for Vice-President, said of President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation: "I do not know whether that proclamation is going to be taken back or not. I am going by rule to take it back the first opportunity I get. It was a wicked thing to have issued."

☞ We have searched the ancient Gospel Story's two papers, both daily, in vain for any notice of the fact that the Treasurer of Washington County, Wisconsin, Mr. Osborn there is a considerable ratio of mortality, diminishing rapidly in Utah, and northerly in Oregon and Washington territory, where it augments largely toward the South on New Mexico.—Popular Science Monthly.

THE drift of northern icebergs is with the great polar currents which meet near the coast of Labrador. They are long ones, floated with the current just Newfoundland, frequently striking on the coast, and usually dissolving in the warm Gulf Stream. Some of these icebergs are 400 feet high. The immense mass was struck by the engine and knocked directly across the track. Some fifty-three cows passing over him. He was then tumbled down a bank 300 feet high, over stones and stumps, and just as he got to the edge of the river he struck against a pile-driver that was at work, and, his head laying on the top of the pile for a minute or two, the ponderous hammer descended, striking him on the cheek, bursting his face somewhat. The shock rolled him into the river just as an up-river packet was passing, and, by some miraculous the unfortunate man was entangled in one of the wheels, and whirled round and round for an hour and a half before he was discovered and released. He was picked up nearly drowned and removed to the cabin, where his wants were supplied. After he had eaten a hearty meal he was supposed by the captain, who asked:

"Is there anything you would like to have?"

"No, no," replied the canvasser, "there is nothing but this——"

"What? what?" ejaculated the captain. "what is it?"

The book agent smiled sweetly as he produced a subscription list and said:

"Subscribe for that beautiful book entitled 'The Poisoned Gum Drop, or the Candy Woman's Revenge,' by the author of 'Clones, the Button-Hole Maker,'"

What Democratic Rule Is.

The State of Texas is under Democratic control throughout. Every department is Democratic. The San Antonio Herald is a Democratic paper in that Democratic State. And this is that Herald's verdict upon its party's administration of State affairs:

"In our Legislature the characteristic feature is waste and extravagance. Offices are multiplied, salaries increased, and the people's domain squandered in the most reckless manner; but the sacred trust—the school fund—amounting to $800,000—submitted to their fiduciary care, locked seized and appropriated to the payment of the millenge and per diem and other expenses of this session of the Legislature, and to make good the deficit in the State Treasury, caused in part by the expenses incurred for the Constitutional Convention. . . . We are cursed with a Legislature, one of a series, which, by its majorities, is synonymous with the terms of Providence, groans us down with the iron heel of oppression, have piled taxes thus upon Pelion high, and but partially and imperfectly exposed the very laws they themselves enacted. They have run the expenditures of the State from a couple of hundred thousand dollars a year into the millions; they, in their expenditures, have exceeded the revenues of the State, and instead of reforming this condition of affairs to a healthy condition by retrenching all expenses to the natural income of the State, they are to-day loading bonds to make good the deficiencies in the Treasury, which, when sold for what they may bring in the market, with all the handy appendages of Commissioners to sell and commissions and other expenses, running into the hundred thousands of dollars, will be met by the project to issue other bonds for the purpose of paying the exigency to pay the principal and interest of the bonds then issued. In the meantime they place their sacreligious hands upon every actual dollar and cash assets in the Treasury, as the special school fund, which should be a sacred fund, and this they propose to bridge over what the Legislature deems an emergency."

In another article of the same issue the Herald says: "Our State Government is a curse and our laws are a mockery, and we call upon our party to cease its malice and apply the corrective. By the apathy of the State Government anarchy prevails and lawlessness is the consequence. The people must act in the town defense. The Governor and Legislature will not."

Address of the National Liberal Republican Committee.

NEW YORK, July 28, 1876.

To the Liberal Republicans of the United States:

On the 9th day of May last a meeting of the "National Committee of the Liberal Republicans," so called, was held in the city of New York, at which a call was issued for a National Convention, to be held at the Fifth avenue Hotel, in the city of New York, on the 20th day of July, 1876, at which meeting thirteen States were represented. Another meeting, to which the signers hereof were invited, was held at the Fifth avenue Hotel, in the city of New York, on the 6th day of June, 1876, at which meeting, according to all accounts, from 200 to 300 armed white men from the surrounding States were present, a demand was made upon the wishes for the surrender to them of the State of Louisiana, and upon the refusal to do so preparations were at once passed in negotiations concerning this demand, and the white inhabitants of Louisiana compact that if the arms were not given up in a short time the citizens of the witnesses say in a half hour the whites were to march into the city. The militia refused to deliver up their arms, and a strife was then inaugurated, unwarranted and illegal, and that they had been in fear for their lives. That they were not allowed to carry their arms. A strife was then opened upon the militia, who were assembled, and some fifty of the militia were killed, and a call for a National Convention this day ordered, to be held at the public money in his pockets.—Chicago Tribune.

☞ After reviewing the situation up to date, and concluding that the signs indicate that the Democratic party, the Hartford Post says: "The independent and uncertain vote is almost wholly going to Hayes, while both sides lay claim to a break in the lines. This will insure not only Connecticut and all New England for the Republican party, but New York and New Jersey likewise."

☞ Tweed and Tilden—

"We were as brothers," William said,
"Till, sliding with the tide,
You struck me, sam, when I was down,
A foul and traiterous blow."

"Forgive me, Bill," said oily Sam,
"The fates, not men, ordain;
Since I have climbed the White House pole
We'll brothers be again."

—Brooklyn Argus.

☞ Harper's Weekly says of the letter of Gov. Hayes: "Clear, unequivocal and courageous. No one can read it without the conviction that it is the word of a man who fully comprehends the political situation, and whose sympathies and purposes are those of all sincerely patriotic citizens. It is not the utterance of a dexterous politician intended to mean all things to all men. It is the plain and unequivocal declaration of a tried and experienced honest public man with an embarrassing record."

☞ There is truth as well as wit in what says the Chicago Tribune, in this passage from the brilliant speech of Storrs, in Aurora:

"Gov. Tilden is the father of watered stock. He is the great railroad wrecker and railroad [laughter]. He is the author of the fraudulent mortgage bonds, and I don't need to explain to you what those instruments mean. They never yet came into the door of his office a healthy corporation which did not bubble and run from the other door in crutches and in bandages [Laughter and cheers]. All along, up and down this great West, are the wrecks of desperate hopes and blasted expectations that storekeepers and corporations have had when they have passed through the grist and death dealing treatment of the man Tilden.

☞ In noticing the statement that the Hamburg affair is to be treated according to law, the Albany Journal says: "Then while the law works on its own fixed course, it cannot take the 'existing' necessarie out of the forum of public thought and duty. The people of the whole Nation have a deep-old duration in the matter. Public sentiment is more potent than law. Let the country declare through its political action that I will not tolerate these Democratic assassins or their political friends, and the work of blood will be stopped. Let the country, on the other hand, put the Democratic party in power, and the knife will be freshly unsheathed."

ERASTUS ALLEN,
Chairman of the National Liberal Republican Committee.

THE other day a dreamy young poet of Burlington sat down with a bundle of old letters, in stained envelopes with faded addresses, to write a story. Opening over the days that are dead. He began:

Though I've woken and thought as I sit here alone
I will carefully bypass you,
For better the shadows of years that are gone
Than the sorrows of days that are here.

And when he got that far he opened one of the letters for a little inspiration, and read: "Sir yur old fur drinks at this fair is $17.85 an' has been runnin' 8 months and if not pade this evenin' will present the same to yure onored father fur payment. Resp, Abel Gimling," and then he sighed and laid away the letters, and didn't feel like finishing the requiem that day.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

Gov. Chamberlain's Account of the Hamburg Massacre.

In a letter to United States Senator Robertson, Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, makes the following suggestions concerning the affair at Hamburg:

Your request for a statement from me of the recent bloody affair at Hamburg in this State was duly received. I have waited before replying until official reports and statements should be received. There are now before me the official reports of the Attorney-General and the Adjutant and Inspector-Generals, the testimony taken at the Coroner's inquest, and the written statements of several intelligent persons who were present and witnessed the whole or parts of the affair. I will proceed to give as briefly as possible the leading facts as they appear from the evidences to which I have referred.

On the 4th of July last a company of the State militia (colored) were marching along one of the streets of Hamburg. The street was over 30 feet wide, and the company was marching in columns of fours. While they were thus marching they met a two-horse buggy in which were a white man and two negroes. Before the buggy could pass the company, the white man undertook to compel the company to break ranks and let him pass. This was refused by the officer in command, and the buggy was driven through the ranks of the company, which were compelled to break ranks to avoid being run over. The company was then marched on to the armory, and the officer in command of the company, Capt. Shaw, went to the magistrate's office and procured a warrant for the arrest of the white man who had driven through the ranks of the company. The warrant was placed in the hands of a constable, who, with a detachment of the company, proceeded to the armory for the purpose of arresting the white man. He was not found there, but was found in the street, and was arrested by the constable and detachment of the company. He was then taken to the magistrate's office, and bail required in the sum of $200. This he refused to give, and was committed to jail. Subsequently he was released on bail, and on the 8th of July he appeared before the magistrate to answer the charge. The trial was postponed to the 15th of July, and on that day the prosecutor appeared, but the defendant did not appear. The magistrate issued a warrant for his arrest, and placed it in the hands of a constable, who, with a detachment of the company, proceeded to the armory for the purpose of arresting the defendant. He was not found there, but was found in the street, and was arrested by the constable and detachment of the company. He was then taken to the magistrate's office

LOVE AND MISCHIEF

O a sunny day Love's shoes to array
Whose wanty path fordeckes,
Where he shall deep in sandwash lay
And watched his snare 'mash flowers hidden
Low, saying he means to elude
For Masterful and, not he should smother
Yet, this fancy, he said only
Quite forgot you to my mother

Said Mischief, "I'll me eat you fire-
Hid me near share your power with us,
And give of every heart for pain."
One held to love and half to pain."
Love laughed both be ask, saying
He was not here to prove a nanny,
And—at last! it cause to pass
He gave in to the little Tartar.

Love flew to Venus in a pet,
And cried, when he had told his story
"A queen of beauty never let
That little boy wear half my glory
This goddess, with a look sedate
Replied "I cannot alter fate,
But, any shall conquer still my boy,
Till make love's pain more sweet than joy

ADVISED TO DEATH.

Mr. MURZLEBURT had only one excuse in his placid life. He was blessed with a wife whose value was above rubies, and a daughter of whom he was grateful to excess. Illumined his home with her graces and beauty. His naturally uneven temper had been smoothed and toned down into an unruffled current by the modifying influences of his quiet home, and his life flowed along in a stream of almost unbroken tranquility. His conscience was clear, his outlook cheering. But as a boarder his appetite ominous. And if he had been able to buy a nice little place out in the middle of the Sahara, where he could plan and build in his own way, subject only to the restrictions of the common law and the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, he would have been a happy man. Mr. Murzleburt's great cross was that he was surrounded by superior neighbors, who advised him to death. He never entered upon a domestic enterprise of whatever nature that he was not immediately surrounded by a multitude of counselors in whom there was no sense of solid wisdom. He was a patient man, and he endured a great deal before he began to complain. And probably if he had not built that summer-house, no murmur would ever have broken the unsophisticating silence of his lips. But that summer-house was the feather that fractured the camel's spine. He ought to have known better than to begin such an enterprise, but this is a world of shortsightedness, and faulty undertakings, and mistaken plans, and if Mr. Murzleburt never made a mistake he might for the benefit of his weaker neighbors. Presently, after they had got well to work again, Mr. Middleth came by. He shouted:

"Cool-ken house in the front yard, Mumble?"

Mr. Murzleburt, who always resented all his familiar and slangy style of salutation, and was additionally incensed at the coarse allusion to his summerhouse, was inclined to resent it by calling his neighbor, Mid, but he swallowed his wrath and maintained his dignity and meekly explained what he was building.

"Summer house, eh?" said Mr. Middleth, kindly. "Looks more like a forestory wind-trap. What under the sun are you making it so everlastingly high for?"

Mr. Murzleburt explained. Mr. Blanchard's idea, at which Mr. Middleth snorted his most reliable and sound snort, complete by putting Mr. Blanchard's sniffs to shame. "Bosh!" he said, "it'll look like a derrick case, or the Brooklyn Tunnel set on end. Blanchard's an ass, anyhow. Thinks quite a man drove down the street with an apple wagon, and when he got in front of Mr. Murzleroot's, the horses stood up on their hind legs, turned around in opposite directions, upset the wagon in two and one half, and dashed wildly off toward their native home, carrying with them such bottoms of the harness as clung to them, and leaving the quiet street littered with apples and bent wood. The carpenter came down from his ladder, and backed off a few steps to look at the perfect work of the advisory council, when his hair stood up on end, and on his head that it pushed his hat off, and with a wild shout of terror he jumped over the front fence and went whooping and howling down the street a jibbering maniac. Oh! Mr. Throop on his way back home, stopped at the corner of the street, and, glaring wildly in the direction of Murzleroot's lawn, shrieked for the police. Finally, Mr. Murzleroot, somewhat bewildered by the confusion and excitement of the usually quiet street, went to the front gate to see what was the matter. As he reached it, a woman with a white soured face, went screaming by, while a baby in her arms was writhing in horrible convulsions. Mr. Murzleroot turned and looked in the direction of the woman's horrified gaze, and his eyes fell upon the summer-house, planned and built under the instruction of his wiser neighbors. The color went out of his face and the light went out of his eyes. He did not cry out, he did not fall to the earth, he did not move a muscle after the expression of unspeakable supernatural horror crept over his colorless face. When it grew dark, so that people coming home from their work in the neighborhood could see fires to the summer house. Mr. Murzleroot still stood by the gate, unchanged in posture or expression. People who met him spoke to him and touched him. He had turned to stone.

P. S.—At the request of his widow he will be broken up and used in the Dividend street improvement.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

How Shall we Train Our Girls?

AMERICANS always censure that usage which in England gives the titles and estates to the oldest son, and leaves the others, too often to shift for themselves, or, what is worse, to sit down in moan and beggarly dependence on the favored one.

But do not many among us make quite as unjust a distinction between the boys and girls of their families?

All Americans, except snobs and simpletons, fear their sons will not make what their prospects to some honorable business or profession. But too many train their girls for mere parlor playthings, and defraud them of all chance for honest independence in the days of darkness which may come. There is no insane idea among a certain class, that an idle girl, ignorant of all the useful arts of life, is a lady above her who applies herself to study, and learns to do something thoroughly—who has an aim in life.

The hope of such weak parents is that their daughter may make a great marriage, and be the ornament of some elegant house.

Will this be less likely if she knows how to order a home, if she is well read, if she is skilled in music, in painting, in writing, or sewing? Will she be less a lady in her own home for having had the training of a sensible woman in her father's house?

Suppose this girl never marries—many more women do not—and that her riches take wings, and the strong arm she has leaned on fails; what is to become of her then? She will be utterly helpless, and will become an unhappy woman, whom the world can lose without missing.

The Princess Louise is an artist, and has illustrated the poem which her noble young husband, the Marquis of Lorne, has recently published.

There is no royal road—to art, and her skill, like that of my other noble woman, is the result of study and labor.

Bismarck's daughter is what we in America should call "a capable girl." Besides her accomplishments, she has great skill with her needle, is versed in all the good German home arts, and is possessed of rare good sense and kindly virtues.

Let us be done with the nonsense which awards the title "gentlemen" to our sons who work, and denies that of "lady" to our late idolized, useless girls. Let our girls all have a chance for honest independence in this world of many changes.—The Watchword.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

TEXAS still has over 80,000,000 acres of public lands.

A SINGLE concern in South Abington, Mass., turns out 1,500,000,000 eyelets for shoes annually.

FROM reports from nearly every county in Nebraska indicate the finest prospects ever known in that State.

THE amount of water daily consumed in London is 7,38,000,000 gallons, or 41,357,000,000 gallons per year.

IT is estimated that the Texas cotton crop will be 800,000 bales, and it will be at least 5,000 bales in excess of 1879.

THE ash seed crpons in the fall of the year, just before frost. Preserve the year, just before frost. Preserve the seed to sand till the next spring, then plant.

THE Merrimack Manufacturing Company of Lowell, Mass., has lost $80,000 during the past year, and the quick capital is reduced to $687,000.

RICE culture in Louisiana employs 20,000 people, or 1200 plantations produces a crop worth $3,000,000, and develops business to the extent of $10,000,000.

THE deepest Atlantic soundings ever made were about ninety miles north of the island of St. Thomas, in 3,875 fathoms, and the pressure was so great that the bulb of the thermometer broke, though made to stand a pressure of three tons.

THE number of libraries by the census of 1870 above the age of ten years, in round numbers, is 5,200,000. Of these more than 2,000,000 were adults, upward of 2,000,000 more were from fifteen to twenty-one years of age, and 1,000,000 were between ten and fifteen years. Of the number between fifteen and twenty-one years it is estimated that about one-half have passed the opportunity for education.

According to a statement in one of the technical journals, the electric light is now successfully applied to the lighting of one of the principal mills in Berlingen. Two separate sets of four magneto-electro machines are placed, which feed four suitably located lamps constructed on the Serrin principle. The dimensions of the room so lighted are sixty meters, or about one foot to ten feet, and each lamp gives a light equal to about 100 carcel lamps. Each magneto-electric machine requires about 20 horse-power to operate them. The cost of the four lamps, exclusive of the maintenance of the motive power, averages about twenty cents per hour.

The Chinese Management of Roses.

IT has been stated that the Chinese method of layering roses is sometimes more successful than ours. Late in the summer they select a vigorous shoot of the same year's growth and tongue it; then put in a small pebble to keep the slit open and bind a handful of fresh moss around the tongue, keeping it constantly dampened. In about six weeks it will have struck roots and can be taken off without disturbing the mossy covering. Many of the garden roses can be increased in this way during the months, which can be severed with a sharp spade in the autumn and new bushes formed of them. Budding and grafting are also done, by skilful amateur cultivators often increase their stock. A sharp penknife can do duty for a budding knife, and the handle of a toothbrush, if ground down smooth, will answer for a spud to aid in lifting the bark. From the last of June to the last of August is the best time for this process as the bark can then be more easily raised from the wood. Take a smooth stalk and make a horizontal cut across the bark, through to the wood, but not into it. From the center of this cross-cut make another cut straight down the stem, an inch or more in length. These two cuts should resemble a T. Slice off the bud you desire to propagate with one cut of the penknife, cutting it close to the main stalk. Now, with the edge of the spud turn back the bark on each side of the straight cut and insert the bud so the wood of the branch to be budded, fitting it tightly to the crossed cut. With a bit of soft yarn bind down the bark, leaving the point of the bud exposed. A handful of dampened moss must then be bound round the stem, taking care to leave the tiny point of the bud exposed to the air. In six weeks the wrappings can be removed, but all other shoots must be kept from growing on the budded branch. By this means a rose bush can be made to bear half a dozen different colored roses.—*N. THE TWO FLAGS.

A PANEL.

"You never can hope," said a gay new flag
To an old flag, battered and torn,
"To wave on the air your powder-stained rag,
In blaze of this jubilant morn

"But keep yourself folded, blaling your rent,
And perhaps somewhere in the rear
They'll carry you yet; though fete days were meant
For bright flags—fresh colors, my dear."

Wild music came pealing; lines of brave men
Were linked in processioner throng;
Hands clapped, flowers showered, and broke rang, "Cheer
The honored and loved passed along

The new flag waved proudly, flaunting its grace
The multitude saw it, unstirred;
But murmurs arose round the old flag's place—
Hurrahs! hundred hurrahs were heard

Our common feel hearts! In at the death!
Our battle-stained flag!" cried the men,
Our dear flag!" said women, under their breath
"Three cheers for the old flag!" rang then.

The old flag was cheered, yet boldly and long,
Till its tatters looked more gaudy than new;
Ah! saw flag, you're fresh and brilliant and strong,
But glory's a thing to be won.

HOW KITTY WENT BLACKBERRYING.

"Biv me more! Biv me more, Susie!" cried Kitty, holding open her little mouth, all purple with blackberry juice.

"Oh, Kitty! I can't find any more; the boys have eaten them all up! These bushes, Besides, there's the dinner-bell; we must go back to the house," said Susie, taking her little sister's hand, and starting down the hill.

Now Kitty loved blackberries dearly, and was dreadfully disappointed that Susie had not found more among the bushes by the old stone wall, and her little heart was so full of grief that some of it ran out of her eyes, as she stumbled over the grass, sobbing out: "Oh, Susie! you're so awful, awful bad girl; you said you'd die before you'd eat my berries, and you lied, you lied, you lied, now I can't love you any more, Susie!"

"What's the matter with my little Kitty?" asked Mr. Riley coming out from the back porch, where he had been trying to wash the red from his hot face.

"Why, father, she's crying because I didn't get her half a few blackberries by the old stone fence, and I found all I could, father!" cried Susie, indignantly.

"My little girl you must not cry," said Mr. Riley, as he lifted Kitty into her high chair at the dinner-table. "I know where there are plenty of blackberries on the woodside, and you and Susie can go there after dinner."

Kitty's sunshine smile at this dried all the tears away from her eyes in a minute, and when dinner was over she and Susie, with each a basket, set off for the woodlot. There was the cornfield to pass through, and that was a long way for Kitty's little fouryear-old feet, and then they came to the rye-field, where the rye stood high above her head, then the turnip field, and then the last woodlot, with the hickory and buttermut trees, the brook down in the bottom, and the cave which Susie used to think must have been a giant's house, she was so small at Kitty. But Susie was ten years old now, and knew there were no bears any where near except in cages. All along the fence and in the edge of the woods, were the bushes, and "lots and lots" of berries, and now Kitty did not need any one to feed her, her own little hands could keep her mouth busy. Susie was so busy when she could eat no more that she began to think how hot and tired she was, and how her little basket had not one blackberry in it yet.

"I want to do home," announced Kitty, abruptly.

"Well, you can go alone. I've got to pick berries," said her sister, beginning work again. Kitty stood watching her sunbonnet and shaking the curls indignantly for a while, and then walked off.

"I'll die lost and fighten lost Susie," she thought in her naughty little heart. The woodlot was very large, covered with little hollows and groups of trees —besides the great wood where the brook was. Kitty was soon lost to sight between one of these clumps of trees, and when after some time Susie looked up from her work, she could see nothing of her. She went to the bars and looked through the fields toward the house. Nothing was seen of Kitty, and, supposing she had certainly gone home, Susie went back to her own basket and Kitty's, too, and then started home. On her way through the turnip-field she spied her father and the men making the new pond in Mr. Wheeler's farm, and Susie resolved to go over and look on. So she crossed the fields, and setting the berries under a tree, soon forgot everything else in watching them letting on the water. It was half-past six before the men were through. Susie and her father went home together. "Where's Kitty?" he asked, as they walked along. "Oh! she got tired and went home long ago," said Susie. When they reached the house Mrs. Riley came out to meet them. "How long you have been gone, Susie!" she said. "Where's Kitty?"

"Why—she came home long ago," cried Susie, in surprise. "She wouldn't pick berries."—"Oh, James, the child is lost," exclaimed Mrs. Riley, in alarm. "How could you let her come alone, Susie?

Poor Susie did not know what to say, she had not thought of any danger to Kitty, and when she saw her father and Sam, the hired man, start up through the fields to look for her little sister, she felt as if she must go too. But her mother would not let her. It seemed as though a week had passed by to Susie and her mother, when at last, when it was nearly eight o'clock, they saw Mr. Riley and Sam coming down the hill, and yes! Mr. Riley carried Kitty in his arms. The tired little girl was fast asleep, and her pretty white frock and sunbonnet were all wet with dew. She opened her eyes as her father laid her on the bed, and then fell asleep again. Kitty also was very tired, and her head ached, and her

The Grand Traverse Herald has spoken of the speech of Gen. Cockburn as a Most Startling Blow lately.

Gen. B. M. Cockburn was then interrogated, and as he arose a storm of applause greeted him. This was so long, continuous that for several minutes he was unable to proceed. For half an hour—perhaps longer, we thought [illegible] of time—he held the crowd breathless upon the words of fire that fell from his lips. Brilliancy scintillating flashes of wit, keenly barbed arrows wherewith deep the vulnerable parts of the foes [illegible] eyes, sensation followed sensation of [illegible] and conviction, [illegible] argument, followed in rapid succession.

Spell bound he held the large audience by, what, in words of burning eloquence, he pictured the misery of [illegible] and suffering through which the [illegible] boys in blue had come to pass in order that a nation might be saved from traitor rule. Ages may not elapse before that one [illegible] Cockburn has [illegible] in the Grand Traverse region on Monday night. Later, cutting, scathing, we [illegible] down the Democratic orators, [illegible] garbed in the mother's [illegible] and dyed for her own [illegible], if the [illegible] peculiarity of mourning and [illegible] the colors of a [illegible] those [illegible] grey hairs and bowed head of [illegible] widow, first upon the [illegible] upon a southern battle field [illegible] the Grand Inquisitor [illegible] on household, and reminders of [illegible] to the [illegible] from [illegible] [illegible] of all, rolling his [illegible] [illegible] pledging it with tears and [illegible] and [illegible] to cover all [illegible] of sympathy with the [illegible] and [illegible] that have so nearly [illegible] the foundations of the great [illegible] dom.

With tears in his eyes and with [illegible] ing voice the gallant General [illegible] ting tribute to the brave three hundred of his own command that [illegible] [illegible] they fell, with their own shields for a winding sheet, made with [illegible] life blood so lavishly shed for the freedom we enjoy.

As the sneer and taunt is [illegible] to us "the bloody shirt" from a hundred [illegible] the fields pictured with the blood of [illegible] slain the cry comes up, Shame! Shame!

We cannot do justice to the General's remarks, and have given the barest outlines of his speech. He carried everything before him, and as he took his seat round after round of applause showed the appreciation of his audience.

The opposition papers are so diffident in their declarations of Democratic economy that it is proper to inquire what such declaration means. We are vaguely informed that $60,000,000 are to be "saved", that the expenses of the Government have been so recklessly increased under Republican management that the interposition of Democratic hands is necessary to preserve the people from absolute pauperism.

The expenses of Government at a time when its army and navy were crippled by Democrats, for the purpose of weakening the defensive forces of the Nation, that Democratic traitors might the more easily overthrow the Nation, are now compared with the general expenses at a time when everything is nominally advanced in value because of a long and disastrous struggle brought about by Democratic traitors. We are assured that the party which produced the nearly fatal condition of affairs is the one to effect a revival of prostrated energies and industries.

What does Democratic economy mean. It means the crippling of the navy; the weakening of the army, and a reckless disregard of the manifest needs of the Nation. Is there not a striking similarity between the policy of the Democratic party now and in 1860? Then they prepared the way to the violent seizure of the Government in the event of their defeat at the polls. Now, their "economy is directed in the same channels. Democratic economy is such only in name. Enormous deficiency that must of necessity follow the curtailment of the appropriations for army, navy and postal service. A nation of 40,000,000 people without proper defensive facilities is a laughing stock of other nations. The withdrawal of the fast mail trains is a step in retrogression unequaled in the history of any progressive people.

Both Michigan Senators who voted against jurisdiction, also voted against inquiring on the same grounds, in the Belknap case.

Sitting Bull was converted a few years ago under the ministrations of Father De Smet, the celebrated Indian missionary. The convert should be hanged before he backslides.

The House bill for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers was taken up and amended, and passed to the 31st. ...In the House, in the Virginia contested election case of Platt vs. Goode, the minority report that Goode, the Democratic sitting member, is entitled to the seat, was agreed to—105 to 97. The conference report on the Military Academy bill was adopted.

On the 29th, the Senate was not in session. ...In the House the bill passed by both houses extending the time for the redemption of land sold for direct taxes was called up and amended so as to exclude the insanity of the lady convicted (Mrs. Surratt, the National cemetery), and was passed as amended. An evening session was held for general debate.

On the 31st ult., in the Senate, the resolution prohibiting the supply of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians was passed. Bills were passed—authorizing an increase in the cavalry force, consisting of 2,500 men to be enlisted under the act; House bills, to provide temporarily for the expenses of the Government, and for other public printing, in advance of the regular appropriation bill; Angell Bill, The impeachment trial was proceeded with, and the final question was determined with closed doors, and an order was adopted that nothing on the question of guilt, each Senator might state his reasons for his vote, occupying not more than a minute; in so doing. ...In the House, a number of bills were introduced, and referred. The minority report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, was reported—was 76, nays 110. Bills were passed relating the appropriations for the various departments to Aug. 16. A message was received from the President pointing out what he considered some of the defects of the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill in making inadequate provisions for some, and none at all for other, branches of the public service, and stating that he did not feel warranted in vetoing the bill, but that it was his duty to show where the responsibility belonged for such embarrassments caused by its defects.

On the 1st, in the Senate, a message was received from the President transmitting copies of the correspondence between himself and Ivory Chamberlain, and other reports, in regard to the recent trouble at Hamburg, S. C. A new conference Committee was appointed on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. A joint resolution was passed providing for the restoration of the writing of the original Declaration of Independence. The conference report on the Military Academy Appropriation bill was agreed to. House bills were passed—to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming, to be known as the Evanston district; to create an additional land district in the Territory of Idaho; providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas, with an amendment. Senate bills were passed, and were announced as members of the Committee to consider the work of reorganizing the army. The impeachment trial was concluded by a verdict of acquittal, the same standing thirty-five for conviction and seventeen for acquittal, being less than the two-thirds required to convict. Judge Blair announced on the late Edward Y. Personeller of the House from Kentucky. In the House, majority and minority reports were made from the committee on the Public Lands Pool, accompanying the former was a resolution that the report and accompanying documents be printed and referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to inquire into the alleged shootings of law, and ascertain the liability of Secretary B. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, for such alleged acts; the minority resolution was to the effect that the House find no cause of complaint or censure attaching to Secretary Robeson growing out of his official transactions with the firm of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. The conference report and resolution were adopted. A bill was reported and passed appropriating $225,500 for the payment of indebtedness incurred in the construction of the New York Postoffice building.

ON the 2d, a substitute for the House bill granting a pension to R. M. Bissell, who was injured while defending the late Secretary Seward from the assassin Payne, was passed in the Senate; the amount awarded $4,000. Several amendments to the River and Harbor Appropriation bill were agreed to, ...In the House a unanimous report from the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department on the Ivsane Asylum investigation, and minority and minority reports from the same committee on the Pacific Railroad Investigation. An evening session was held for general debate.

On the 3d, in the Senate, a message was received from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the papers in the investigation of the charges against the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Mr. Wilson stated, in reply to a question by one of the Committee, that he attributed the differences between the President and himself to the fact that the former believed Babcock to be innocent, and, so believing, he could not sympathize with the prosecution of Babcock's case. He further stated that his own judgment was that, whether Babcock was guilty or innocent, under the laws of the Government, he could not properly be tried by the Senate, and, therefore, he had not felt that the former should be called upon to act. But the chief glory of the Montenegrins is to answer in large figures to the solicitation: "How many, how many have you killed this year?" The men kiss each other's faces on meeting, but the most deferential salute is to kiss the stomach. The doctors of Montenegro are unemployed, and they practice by oral tradition only. A party of German physicians is now making a study of the country, while caring for the wounded, and through them came interesting accounts of what is the real condition of the Montenegrins.

—The Primitive Methodist Church of Canada has received a proposition for union from the Methodist Church of Canada.

Mr. Wilson's Statement.

HARTFORD, CONN., Aug. 1.

HENRY WILSON, ex-Senator of the United States Treasury, was before the House Committee on the 8th Louis whisky trials in St. Louis, on the 27th ult., and gave in detail his knowledge in regard to the late whisky prosecutions in the West, and particularly in regard to the connection of Babcock with them. Wilson said that there was the lack of co-operation on the part of the President in the whisky cases generally, until Babcock became involved, when a coolness between the White House and the Treasury Department arose. He also testified that, in a conversation with Gen. Horace Porter, Porter gave an explanation of the dispatch-gram was in Babcock's handwriting.

They did it to make the soft money men and for no other purpose—say they did speak for the people.

The Result of a Democratic Victory.

The Chicago Tribune, referring to its neighbor, the Times, says:

It will denounce the Democratic party one day, and extol Tilden the next. Yesterday was the Republican day, and the Times, in good old swashbuckler style, declares:

The Times has denounced, and it hereby reiterates its denunciation of the old rock-ribbed, mountain buttressed, copper buttressed, proslavery, Rebellion Confederate combination of political fossils as a putrid reminiscence and a political land mark of most detestable odor.

Yet it is the same "putrid reminiscence," and this same Copperhead and Confederate Democracy, which the Times desires to see restored to the entire control of the Government. It is impossible, of course, to elect Tilden without bringing about this result. Nothing, indeed, could have been selected in the whole country who would make his election so essentially a party triumph as Tilden will, if he should be elected. His Administration will be in every sense of the word a Democratic "machine." Administration. It will be "Bourbon," "Confederate," "mountain buttressed," "copper buttressed," and copperheaded. It will bring to the front all the old State rights fizzling white-livered Secessionists of Southern Democrats and Copperheads of the Northern Democrats. The House of Representatives will go into their hands, and they will regulate its action entirely according to their notions and necessities through the appropriations. The United States Senate will go into their hands, and they will confirm no man for office who is not a true Confederate at heart. The whole foreign service will go into their hands, they will begin to manufacture sentiment in all the countries of the world in behalf of the "lost cause." The civil service at home will go into their hands, and it will be a gigantic machine for keeping down the negro vote the south and manipulating State politics at the North in favor of the Confederates. The State Governments will largely go into their hands, and when this shall have been brought about, then the work will be began in earnest of repealing the Constitutional amendments and undoing the results of the War of the Rebellion.

Who can doubt, after the exhibition of the Confederate sentiment at Washington these last eight months, under the restraint of a Republican Senate and with a Presidential election ahead to hold them down, that when they accede to the control of all the branches of the Government they will take steps to reimburse the South for its losses during the War, to deprive the negro of the right of suffrage, and to institute a system of black labor at the South that will subport the whites in their constitutional and hereditary illiteracy? It is the hope of this that induced the Southern Democrats to proclaim boldly that they would accept any candidate and any platform that the Northern Democrats could suggest that would be likely to carry sufficient Northern States to insure victory.

Tilden says if elected President he has all the power conferred by the laws for the protection of all American citizens. His interpretation of the laws will be like that of Buchanan, who could find no power to suppress a rebellion in the South, but could find authority to suppress a rebellion in Utah.

Gov. Hendricks wrote to Washington asking for the repeal of the Resumption clause in any form and shape, knowing that any such measure would be hailed as an inflation triumph. Mr. Tilden, with Gov. Hendricks's letter before him and the same knowledge, also took a position which he knew would give moral support to every "soft-money" lunatic in the county. How is that for a "hard-money reformer"?

And here is another! Simeon K. Wolf of Salem, Ind., elected to Congress by the Democracy of the New Albany District, in 1872 has come out squarely for Hayes and Wheeler, and will take the stump for the Republican ticket. And still they come! The latest recorded is L. W. Humphrey, a Democratic State Committeeman of North Carolina. He repudiates Tilden and sustains Hayes and Wheeler and the Republican ticket.

A. S. Gilchrist, a representative Democrat of Warrensburg, N. Y., was a few days since heard to say that he would "rather vote for Jeff Davis for President than any other man living." He feels like a great many other representative Democrats.

CENTENNIAL JOTTINGS.

THE Paris Exhibition exhibit in the Main building is an object of great interest.

IN the Main building there are specimens from every known telegraph exhibit now in use beneath the sea.

THE collection of land shells sent by the Indian Guanilweh College contains but seven sea and 100 land species.

THE retail trade at the Centennial grounds has largely increased by the removal of certain restrictions which formerly interfered with it.

EIGHT AND KIWI says September will be the golden month of the Centennial. The managers would be perfectly pleased with silver, or even stamps.

THE Dresden manufactures exchange the Centennial Exhibition as a medium to purchase, and exhibit their fabrics and to transact their spiritual business for the supposed unending fit.

THE most exhibited in the small building contains the Siamese elephant tusks, one weighing 175 and the other 200 pounds; there is also a skirt of ivory 200 inches in width and fifty-two feet in length.

THE visitor to Belgium Exhibit, which it was intended should be erected on the Centennial Grounds on the Fourth of July, will be postponed until September. The site selected by the management is in front of Horticultural Hall. The memorial will be set up by the Hebrew order B'nai Berith.

THE establishment of a great museum seems to be forced upon this country by the generosity of foreigners contributing to the Educational Department of the Centennial Exhibition. America and Japan will parade by drawing their exhibits for such a purpose, and Dr. Da Motta, who has charge of the Brazilian exhibit, intimates that this will be the probable disposal.

IN the Chinese ivory carving exhibit in the Main Building is shown an elephant's tusk, on which is carved a Chinese city, situated on the side of a mountain, in which dose houses, pagodas, military possessions, joggries and all the details of a regular Chinese city are depicted. It occupied the labor of one man for three years, and yet its value in China was only $300. It has been purchased by the Pennsylvania Museum of Art.

THE fifth annual meeting of the National Agricultural Congress is to be held in the hall of the Society for the Promotion of Agriculture at Philadelphia, Sept. 12, 13 and 14. Among addresses announced will be one on the Geology of Agriculture, by Prof. Wm. H. Brewer, of Illinois; one speech, by L. F. Allen; our Dairy Interest, by X. X. Whitall; Agricultural Literature, by A. E. Sweetzer; Agriculture and Horticulture, by Joseph Harris.

A RECENT number of the Boston's Centennial Journal says: "Out of the most names of wonderful interest in the Medical Department, very few have been women. This fact proves that either the dress of women is better suited to the climate than that of men, or that the whole system, less heated by intoxicating liquors, is in a purer condition, or perhaps that they not only have a greater power of endurance, but know better how to take care of themselves, and how to live discreetly."

IT is hard to abandon that interesting story about Dom Pedro passing at the custom house as "Theirgetz" at Philadelphia with a well-worn cap which he had carried thirty years; but, hard as it is it must be done. The Emperor of Brazil did not turn the fingers at the time aware that the paper which he held in his hand was a copy of the Brazilian Union, which was perfectly framed and mounted after the reading. It signifying to know, however, that the wealth and humor of the Emperor applauded the reading.

A CORRESPONDENT wants us to follow up our opinion in regard to the financial success of the Centennial Exposition. The cost of the exhibition was $8,500,000. It will run for 159 days. The daily receipts for admission were $743,711, or $12,900 per day on an average. The daily running expenses are $10,000, leaving a daily profit of $2,900 on admittance account. Fifty-eight days is over one-fifth of the whole time, but for our purpose we will call it one-fourth. Then we will estimate that the daily cash receipts for the next three-fourths will be double, or $25,800, making a grand total of $2,075,800. Add to this one-fourth and the amount is $2,844,416. Deduct the running expenses for 159 days and the net is $2,224,416. Then the account will stand:

Net receipts	$2,224,416
Current orders for 159 days	1,200,000
Expenses	$3,500,000
Received from admission for 159 days	$1,275,800
Amount for gratuitous admission and season ticket holders for 159 days	743,711
Total receipts	$2,019,511

Comment is unnecessary. I have reckoned income on 160 days, when the time is only 159 days. The Board of Finance say they expect to sell the buildings at fifty per cent. of cost. But any man of any caliber knows they cannot get over ten per cent. of cost. They could find the financial sources depends upon those figures. The United States, $1,500,000 will never be paid, nor can it be, and the prospects are the individual States will have to bear 50 to 75 per cent. on their investment.

Crows in India.

A STRANGER arriving in India is at once introduced to two of the greatest curiosities of the country. As his vessel slowly steams up the Hooghly, and almost before her custom House officer has come on board, her rigging has been invaded by at least one hundred and two or more crows, all busily overhauling the deck and scanning from about every nook and other thereof for with a keen eye to No. 1. Should any unobserved dish be inadvertently conveyed from the galley to the saloon, its contents run a strong chance of being swooped off as a prize, and all disputings of fatal as certainly punished upon by a crow.

Leaving the vessel the new arrival loses sight temporarily of the kites, but on reaching his quarters he finds that they are more cheeky than ever. Kites absolutely certain wherever he subsequently travels there he will find the annoying and omnipresent kite, and always to be annoyed by its malicious antics. On the morning after his arrival he is magpie him seated in the verandah, dissecting in his every detail a plate literally "small breakfast," a light meal universally taken in before him dinner he will see two or three crows alighting on the verandah rails. Ignorant as yet of their tactics he will quickly discuss his buttered toast, and perhaps introduce himself to the notice of the crows by throwing them little fragments thereof. Greedily devouring the inch they quietly prepare to take the off. Something calls him away for a moment, and he returns to find the thieves retreating with his toast or egg, and he sits down rightly amused at their impudence.

Perhaps this scene occurs in his room, all the Venetian shutters of which are wide open. As he sits down to his meal he will see a crow perched on the lapel of the Venetian and peering sideways and curiously in to the room, and should he by a moment leave the table to only retires to peer in to toast and the crow goes together.

Everything is fish that comes in the nets of these pilfagers. They will plunder alike the skill of the fisher under in gables and glean at the bottom; they will gauge on sweets, meats or pulse fruit, and are equally at home on the roofs hugging Poon the top of the pulse; while with self greater gusto they will revel on the wife and when it sweetmeats. They are a perfect wiper, and a perfect pest to the commencement of the rains. They will plunder the nose bags of horses, to assist in their affordance and to kitchen, carry off young chickens from the fowl-yard, devour strawberries and tomatoes, await the daily shinkings of the tablecloth, or carry off a present from the table, and in short, by its constant readiness to carry off anything and everything. They generally get the first pickings of anything, and are always to be seen in the company of vultures when engaged in their sanitary operations. I have seen a crow deliberately sit on the dead of a gorging vulture, and try to pull out the beak a richer bit of carrion, the vulture being quite at the mercy of his tormentor. Frogs, the young of birds covered, of course, with down, and even the honey among thieves' mice, weak rats and small and helpless creatures generally, especially the young of the squirrel, are eagerly carried off and devoured.

Though possessed of such a evil character, the crow is extremely tractable as a rule and soon becomes able to answer and the people.—Chambers' Journal.

What the Mormons Believe.

THE Mormon people no more enter into the idea of removing from Utah than the Bostonians reflect on the possibility of evacuating Boston. It would require a conviction of their permanent residence in any stronger terms. They believe that when the Millennium, of which there have no present hope, shall come, Shiloh come, the Saints of the Lord will be gathered together in Jackson County, Mo., where they will reign 1,000 years, all the rest of the world, even including Satan, being destroyed. When they will reign over, by the by, has never been told us. Until that glorious day shall come they are intent on their main efforts to the upbuilding of Utah. The only foundation for such reports as are frequently seen in the newspapers is the sending out of the occasional colony into the neighboring territories, chiefly as a missionary station for the conversion of the Indians. The "Book of Mormon" teaches that the American Indians, therein termed Lamanites, are the descendants of the lost tribes of Israel, and that while it is the duty of the Church to convert all nations to a saving knowledge of the truth, its first endeavors are to be for the salvation of these remnants of the fold.—A Mormon in N. Y. Evening Post.

"Hard Times" to the Democratic Campaign.

It is already evident that the Democrats cannot make the present hard times at the fault effective substitute for all their stock in the pending Presidential campaign. In attacking the economy and ability of the Republican party they only grow a fair. Every one knows that they have made against them has been pressingly disproved, or can soon be so palpably and absolutely as to disprove itself. The spontaneous uprising of patriotism, love of liberty and humanity, and fidelity to the principles for which the Republican party has stood during the last sixteen years, is an unanswerable against any assault of the Democracy. The extraordinary success of the present administration, which has been accelerated by the force of circumstances beyond its control, in the restoration of Democracy to power, is a matter of notoriety that no human power can be hindered by the people, and they will be perpetuated in accordance. But, in perpetuated by the success of the Democracy, dishonest, pusillanimous, and deformed citizens or political organizations of any name, the Democrats find a ready ally in their hard times, actually worthless. It is no secret to politics that hard times hurt the party in power, and the Democrats are determined to make all be capital: they can not if the manufactures of the country. The cry of St. Louis convention was raising cotton key. The speeches of the leaders were of permanent prosperity—in fact, almost every speech before the convention during the change, their hard times and industrial depression, and the platform is full of the same demagogism.

It cannot be denied that this very specious and artful cry is the source of deceiving many men, who are suffering from the present hard times, to vote into voting for Tilden and Hendricks. They are saying: "We can't get worse and perhaps we shall gain something by a change." Ask them in what manner the Republican party can be held responsible for the present stringency and they cannot tell you. Ask them what we would gain by defeating a patriotic party by electing Democrats, or plotting to place a railroad wrecker like Tilden and they do not know. Ask them the well known fact, that the official records that Congress has lost to the Government three millions and consequently added to the portion to and amount of money charged, under Republican administrations than under any previous ones in the whole history of the country, and they are silenced. But still the Democratic demagogues, ignorant sycophants, and repeat the cry "Work is scarce and wages low. The Republicans are responsible for it. Elect the Democratic ticket and you will have prosperity again." And, boldly false and unfounded as the cry is, there is danger that it may deceive and mislead many voters.

We ask every reader who feels the pressure of these "hard times," and who hears this sort of argument, to consider the fact that times are hard not only in the United States but in almost every civilized country of the world. The Republican party can hardly be charged with the hard times which oppress the people of England, France, Spain, Germany and Austria, and these countries are suffering from them, caused to a greater hardly can that the United States. Thousands of people are now out of employment in England and Continental Europe, and those who still find work to do are compelled to accept reduced wages. There, as here, business is stagnant, trade is dull, manufactories are drooping or prostrate. The logic that lays all these troubles in this country on the shoulders of the Republican party comes to a dead halt before the fact that the same troubles exist in countries where there is no Republican party, where there is no tariff legislation, where there has been no contraction of the currency and no question about specie resumption.

The plain, straightforward truth about the whole matter is that the business prostration from which this and other countries are suffering is the natural and inevitable relapse from over-production. If we are suffering a greater relapse, it is because we have gone further in over-production. One result of this over-production, and one consequent of it, is the tendency of population to the large cities—to the centers of commerce and manufactures—and away from the country, from the region of agriculture, where lies the foundation of national prosperity. There is now an unwise distribution of labor. Too many are employed in manufactures and trade, too few in clearing and tilling the earth. There are too many persons

CENTENNIAL JOTTINGS.

THE wood engravings displayed to so unusual are said to possess the delicacy of steel engraving.

THE trial of steam fire engines has been postponed from the 20th of August to the 6th of September.

VISITORS who desire information in regard to American fishes would be gratified at the special display of the fish-culture, on the west side of Agricultural Hall.

AT YARMOUTH, Mass., gill kept the company waiting for the wedding till she came the green sign of which she assumed to take her to the Centennial.

THE large photographs of the interiors of the Portuguese-Government Buildings afford an opportunity for which is much appreciated by visitors.

THE exhibition of live-stock promises to be large and interesting. The entries at present include 200 horses, 200 cattle, more than 200 sheep, 500 swine, and nearly 400 dogs.

IN the Canadian Educational exhibit can be seen a collection of wax impressions of all the great seals of England from the time of Edward the Confessor, 1046 A. B., to Queen Victoria, 1876.

IT is said a marked change has taken place in regard to the manner of visitors. In the beginning they seemed to roam about aimlessly, now it is common to see them with pencil and note-book making memoranda for future study.

AN interesting feature in the Netherlands department is the exhibit of books by the blind, and specimens of work performed by blind people, among which are examples of the fashion displayed in the acquisition of outlandish writings.

THE most notable exhibit in the French Agricultural Department is an attractive feature. It contains a plan of the experimental plantation of M. Meyer at Vincennes, which contains 250,000 trees. The annual production of mulberry-shoots in France amounts to 70,000,000 pounds.

A WATCH has been issued by Gen. Hawley to have with all the show-cases and railroad-rails posted on the fences either inside or outside the grounds. The privilege given to the original purchaser has been abused by farming it out that this peremptory order has become a necessity.

THE latest curiosity at the Centennial is a boy without name or legs. He weighs thirty pounds, is thirteen years old, and in spite of his deformity is able, by means of two fingers on a stump supposed to be a leg, to feed himself, write and even do mechanical work, having made a small secretary before leaving home.

THE Publishers' Weekly thinks our educational show at the Centennial is the best there and says: "In recommending to teachers and all who are interested with educational literature a careful examination of these exhibits at the Centennial, we again congratulate them on the opportunity our own country shows. But we urge them, nevertheless, to be carefully observant of all these details in which we have still to learn from others."

"GIRLS, dear girls," said the wise little boy, tapping with his parasol one of the big torpedoes in the Centennial Government buildings—"this is a wonderful invention for rescuing people. They put them in and shoot it up, dragging them ashore through the surf where ordinary boats could not go." I can exercise insomnace in the proper frame of mind for the full enjoyment of the Centennial Exhibition.

THE Centennial Guard is now composed of fourteen officers and 857 men, the latter force of 1,056 are having been ordered. The regiment is divided into five companies, each of which has its own barracks, in which the men sleep and where they are drilled by the officers. The guards are on duty by day and night, a strict watch being kept in every part of the grounds. Each man has half a day off every fourth day, during which he is at liberty to go where he pleases, provided he returns before the gates are closed at half-past 8 P. M.

THE magistrate's office and station-house on the Exposition Grounds is situated at the Fifty-second street entrance to the grounds, and is presided over by Police-Magistrate Carpenter, assisted by Judge Alexander Jones. The station-house is to the rear of the counting-room, and contains about a dozen massive cells constructed entirely of flagstones, with iron-grated doors. The stone entirely precludes the possibility of an escape, and the cells are cool and comfortable even in the hottest day in summer. The cases that are generally of a trifling character, such as drunkenness or pocket-picking, and owing to the activity of the guards arrests are very few, so that no fear may be felt by strangers. A few days since, however, one of the Turkish exhibitors, who could not speak English, was arrested for assault and battery in consequence of a misunderstanding. He was forcibly frightened, and evidently expected to be lastimodeled by one of the stalwart guards. He was locked up in a cell for about twenty-four hours and then released upon his repeated protests through an interpreter that he would "never do so again."

Sleeping on the House Top in New York.

THE climate of New York during the hot, dry summer closely resembles that of the holy land, and some at least of our devices for mitigating our sufferings under the heat are not unlike the ways of the generations that lived when the mummies were fresh. The ancient Hebrews resided themselves on the housetops, and at certain seasons lived there in temporary booths. The Arabians from the Peninsula to Central Asia sought the refreshing coolness of the evening breezes on their roofs, and the Egyptians habitually assembled there; the Moors wrestled upon them with loads turned toward the setting sun, and with them the custom of using the housetop as a favorite place of family resort traveled along the African coast into Spain, thence to Mexico and South America. Perhaps it even unto-Dates, on this continent, the Spanish invasion, and the exiled race of Croatian navvies that dwell in caves on their lofty roofs when Ulysses was in its prime.

During the last-heated term in this city the rest became the fashion of retiring from the close foul air of the marble tenement-rooms, and many were the roofs on which slept the entire population of one or of these houses, whose numbers rival those of a small village, and on Sunday evening when the smitten heat again beat down upon the city the roof was again the place of refuge. On a tenement-house in Cong street, towering over all others in the neighborhood, eight families slept on Sunday night. "We have enough room up here all summer," an old man said. "About four weeks ago, when we could not sleep down stairs, we drew lots as to who should have the best place; then came a few cool nights, and some gave up their places. To-night I see all hands back again. You see there are good and bad places up here, just as in theatres. Near the chimney is the poorest place, for the bricks are sometimes warm. We gave the unmarried fellows, what ain't got no youngsters, a row on the north side, near the cornices, where the women folks are afraid to go. the wants this, and the other that, but we straightened all that long ago. Twenty-eight years has fallen into his place as a good company of soldiers would at roll-call. A week ago forty-nine souls slept soundly up here."

On one housetop in Macdonald street the father had raised a canvas tent over his mattress, and thereon lay his two children, smiling at the future, while his wife served tea and sake.

Walking along the roofs of a row of ten houses in East Broadway, the scene was that of as many vast uncovered dormitories. On one of these a little wasted child, with the lovely flush of death on its sunken cheeks, rested in its mother's arms, a victim of the former heated term. Around the sorrowing group the cradles slept as though death had not chosen one of their number. Count Marchand.

AMONG the host of misleading words and phrases, which, sounding well, and having got credit by reason of their existence long a season of truth, have gained currency in the world, not the least conspicuous is the one which tells us that "one man is a hero to his valet." The insinuation is, that men, appearing absurd in society and among their fellows, are many bundles of pretenses; that they put and rouge their manners and professions, as it were, so as to appear what they are not; and that their valets, at night, they retire to their chambers, the pudding is loosened, the rouge is washed off, and the valet sees his master in all his naked littleness and wrinkles. In truth, every true man is a hero to his valet; not only to the visible and paid valet who does his toilet for him, but to those attending spirits who are said to watch over each of us, and may be called the valets of our spiritual existence. It is only the hypocrite and the pretender who, exposed to his valet's scrutiny, is a mere infidel in the familiarity of the dishabille.

We know well, for instance, how the great Napoleon, with his many nobleness and frailties, was a hero to his valets one and all. At least old Count Marchand, who died recently in Paris, would have told us that Napoleon was a man to be regarded as a hero, whether he stood in imperial regalia above his cohorts on the champs de Mars, or whether he was discovered, with his breeches unbuttoned and loose, loosely sack, through the solitary valley of St. Helena. Old Count Marchand had seen Napoleon in both guises, had, indeed, aided him to assume his robes of velvet and ermine, and had also assisted him to put on the plain garments of his island prison. Marchand was the last survivor of those who were once set familiarly about the ex-Emperor's person, and probably the last who saw that atomic spirit pass from the world amid whizz, wind, thunder and lightning. He succeeded Constant as Napoleon's valet. Constant, whose name seems a stately sarcasm on his historic incumbency, was no more loyal to Napoleon than was Pey Fondant warfaithful to Napoleon—just so long as Napoleon was powerful; and deserted him, and went over to be petted, then neglected, and left to die by his enemies, after Waterloo.

It was Marchand's boast that in Napoleon's humiliation and helplessness he clung to him the closer. He was even known as the "Corsican spider" more familiarly; for he pulled off his boots, buckled his cravat, garbled his hose, fathered his face for shaving, and kept his own Marseilles waistcoat full of snuff wherewith to help Napoleon when he needed that stimulant, held his coat for him to put on, and handed to him his sword and hat. Had Marchand only afforded a little of the meat of letters, had he been a humbler Horatio, and jotted down what he found Napoleon say and saw him do, what an interesting chronicle, more minute and more vivid than O'Meara's or Las Cases', it would have been!

We like to dwell on such it is a trifler as old Marchand; he represents the most extinct race of devoted and self-sacrificing servitors of greatness, so entire, indeed, was his devotedness, that Napoleon speaks of him in his will as his "friend," and shows that he means it by leaving the worthy valet the goodly sum of $80,000. There was no more pleasant gentleman to talk with living in Paris than the old Count Marchand. Happily he had no conch to slumber: he was a hale, hearty, happy old man; but a loved to fight over again the battles of Napoleon and Sir Hudson Lowe, and to describe with simple eloquence the gentle sensitives of "the master." Napoleon told Marchand to marry a widow or daughter of a soldier of the old Guard; and the faithful fellow married to France to obey the admonition as eagerly as if the unknown widow or daughter was the nearest love. The wife of Count Marchand was got from Louis Philippe, who had a generous way of treating Napoleon's memory, which forever example for later French politicians to follow. Indeed, there are few characters of the Napoleonic times better worth honoring than the good old servant, whose life was a tribute to a sort of humble chivalry that is going out of fashion, and which so stoutly stood by the fortunes of him to whom he was valet.—Appleton's Journal for September.

How it is Done in Alabama.

We publish a letter in this issue of the Inter-Ocean from Alabama, written by a Confederate soldier, a native Southerner, and a gentleman whose name, also, were we permitted to mention it, would carry conviction of the truthfulness of his statements to all. He draws a graphic picture of the state of affairs in Alabama, and states positively that there is no such equality and freedom of the ballot in that State. He states another fact, and this latter we especially desire to call attention to. He says that for the slightest offense, quarreling between husband and wife, for instance, negroes and women are arrested, tried, a heavy penalty imposed, and thereupon their services are sold to pay the fine and costs. In Lee County most of these negroes are sold to Stanley Gordon, of Georgia, who has a plantation in Clay County, and they are sent to work on the line and costs at about seventy-five cents per month. While Gordon is working out their fines they are shackled, chained each night to a log, and guarded with double-barreled shotguns. Gordon is a prominent Democrat, and is now a candidate for Congress in the Democratic interest. Is it true that under the Democratic rule the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors practical slavery is being reasserted in Alabama? It would seem so from the testimony to light, which we could not doubt. There is time not to discuss this matter now, but we shall have volumes of the Constitution, even though planned here and there by the people of the North during the rebellion, compared it, and how far done or depended upon the premises of the vanquished to respect and maintain the settlement agreed upon. The framers returned to their duties, and have since compiled themselves with kindness. They are now to be arrested, but when once they are satisfied that the South will not, and never intended to, set aside the pledges and keep the pledges made so solemnly, a feeling will be created that will bring out the full quality of such nerility, has been paid and full sanction for the future exacted.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

POLITICAL NOTES.

THE Chairman of the Pennsylvania Democratic committee reports that that State the party is a unit, with not a disturbing faction or clique anywhere.

THE State, a Democratic organ in Tennessee, indicates the spirit of the campaign in that State. "Let Hayes come to the front and he will find that we have begun to spell every leading Radical negro in the county and read him as an enemy to the white race."

IF any man sees in Mr Tilden the remains of a reformer, he must be endowed with extraordinary insight into the future of politics.—Springfield Republican.

THE ordinary composition of a Democratic convention is a shrewd politician, plying for logrolling, and ready for sacrifice of principles when they conflict with his interests.—Cincinnati Gazette.

THE Tom Bankers continue with resolutions that he is for Hayes and Wheeler. He tells a reporter of the Boston Herald that the Democratic organization has had the Democratic organization has had the Democratic rats. It thinks the South is really the controlling power in the Democratic party, and if Tilden should be bolted he would really be nominated by that section.

THE "bloody-shirt-and-disloyal phrase," "the guilty non-escape," as told by Bill and Wilson under the pressure of cross-examination, is the latest Democratic device. It shows that he is not a fool. It shows that he knows the people. It shows that he knows that they are not fools. It shows that he knows that they are not fools. It shows that he knows that they are not fools

Lucky is the mouth (especial) fellow, townsman, Rev. J. Elwood, has in his old age met with a lucky surprise. A relative in England recently died and willed him the handsom sum of $15,000. A gold draft for $6,000 has already been sent him, together with an invitation to come and get the balance. Mr. Inwood and two daughters are now absent in Ludiman on a visit, and upon his return he will start for England. We congratulate Father Inwood and hope he may live many long years to enjoy the gift.

The people of this county are more particularly, but in common with the entire commonwealth of Michigan, indebted to Senator Ferry that deeply that his name lies at the bottom and rises paramount to every political consideration in our system of government. We expect and demand of our Representative candidates not evasive and empty pledges on the Senatorial question, but candidate and unquestionable declarations, before the people place them in office. We are gratified in knowing that both our candidates are avowedly Ferry men.

And the people of the 9th District will at the ballot box soon manifest their appreciation of the labors and services of Hon Jay A. Hubbell. Charlevoix county will not pay her debt un less a unanimous vote is given for Mr. Hubbell. When we consider the glorious battle fought by him for our interests and the admirable manner in which he has finally succeeded, we shall indeed be astonished if both parties in Charlevoix county do not pay him the grateful homage of their united votes.

Young man! Don't waste your spare change in frivolous amusements, but save it up, and buy your mother or sister a new "Domestic." If you have no mother or sister, find some good-natured fellow that has, and he and the machine together may help you to a comfortable place in the family, if you shine up to the sister right.

A writer in the Detroit Post graphically depicts the spirit of the Democratic party as illustrated in the House of Representatives during the session just closed. The opening of Congress last December witnessed an influx of faces about Washington such as had not been seen there since the inauguration of Lincoln. The feeble, gaunt features, long of hair and tobacco stained costumes of the men who had lurked it under Democratic administrations, and had thence taken service under the rebel flag, were there in full force. Many of them came in the same spirit with which they had hoped to visit Washington after the direst of Bull Run. All were eager to resume the predominance to which every tradition of Democratic ascendency entitled them. And the Democratic House of Representatives quietly stepped into its old subordination without murmur or remonstrance. An efficient and experienced door-keeper was displaced to make room for the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Confederate Congress. Twenty three Union soldiers were this charged from his department, and nineteen of the places then made vacant filled by Confederates. Nineteen Union soldiers were removed from the Clerk's office, and a majority of their successors were Confederates. The Postmaster of the House was a Michigan man who lost a leg at Kenesaw Mountain. His place was given to an officer in Ashby's Confederate cavalry. Thirteen Union soldiers, most of them disabled by wounds, were dismissed from his department, and all but two of their successors had been Confederates. Fifty seven Union soldiers were discharged by this Democratic House within the space of a few days, many of them having lost an arm or a leg—one of them had lost both arms—and all but ten of their places were given to men who had fought against them in the battles where their legs and arms had been shot away. The most successful road to preferment in the Democratic party as illustrated by its present House of Representatives was through the rebel army.

Under the sad supposition that the worst of the summer's heat was past for this year, a great rush of visitors to the Centennial Exposition has been setting in the past few days. It is stated that 12,000 passengers were carried, Monday night, from New York to Philadelphia. Among the new arrivals lately was a party of 113 Chinese boys from the schools at Hartford and New Haven, who had proceeded in a body to view the wonders of the big show. These are the young Celestials sent to America by the Chinese Government to remain in this country fifteen years and receive a thorough education in our schools and colleges. This afternoon a dispatch announces the arrival of the French artisans, mentioned in previous dispatches.

Dio Lewis on Marriage.

The following very interesting letter on the subject of marriage is from the pen of the celebrated Bostonian, Dr. Dio Lewis. It was written, says the Green Bay (Wis.) Advocate, to a young gentleman in this part of the State, in response to an inquiry asking his judgment and advice upon that important step in life:

MY DEAR SIR: I receive so many letters asking advice on similar subjects to those you mention, that I have concluded to write you a letter which shall be a general answer to all such inquirers. After you have read it you can send it to whatever paper you see fit to, and thus it will reach the class it most concerns. Editors are keen fellows at discovering a basis of commonsense in an article, such as I intend this advice shall have, whatever other graces it may be lacking in; and as their observations will bear out the assertions I make, they will not hesitate to indorse what I say by giving it such circulation as they may consider the case warrants.

Do I advise you to marry? Most certainly I do. I advise every young man to select himself a wife and settle down. You will be unmarried in half what he might be with a wife," Dr. Hall used to say, and he was right. God intended every man to marry when he becomes a man, and if he fails to do so, he loses the best of life. Every young man should make himself a home. When he has that, he is anchored. He is king in the best kingdom on earth. Until he is married his life is lacking in that which best develops his manhood. With a wife to love and work for, and to cheer and keep him he begins to be what God made him to be.

You ask me what I think about "seeing the world" before marrying? I don't think much of it. Travel is travel, and "knocking about," as they say, is quite another think. It is a bad thing. What do you expect to gain by it? The young man who "knocks about" for a few years never lays up anything. He roams from one place to another, and gets into an unsettled, shiftless way of living, which becomes habit, just as hard to break up as any other bad one. In the best years of his life, when he ought to be making himself and his wife a home, he is squandering his manhood, and the chances are that he will not settle down and go to work as he ought to if he marries, but will be eternally moving about, and I pity such a man's wife and him too, for that matter. Life, to be enjoyable, has got to have something settled about it.

If there is any class of beings I do pity from the bottom of my heart, it is the young unmarried "old bachelor" of thirty.

When a woman remains single, she generally makes herself a home, after a certain fashion, though it must necessarily be lacking in many of the elements of what constitutes a home. But the "bachelor" is but little better than an outcast. He is a wanderer in the world. He has no established idea of his happiness on the rocks of single life. If there can be anything more desolate than the old age of such a man I don't know what it is. Many years of observation have proved it to be a fact that nine out of every ten who have never married would have been those who "knocked about" during their youth, which they ought to have been laying the foundation of a happy home for their old age. Young men, don't be bachelors! When you reach the age of thirty, until you get to be thirty or thirty-five, and "knock about" during that time, you are doing the very worst thing you can possibly do for your future. You are throwing away the best chance for happiness, resolving to do the "best that in you lies" to make the most of life, and will never regret it.

Sincerely, DIO LEWIS.

Contents of a Lady's Pocket.

They came walking down the center passage of Main Building at Centennial today—two beautiful and fashionable young ladies, over whose heads prodigality showered twenty summers had passed. They chatted pleasantly as they passed along, and turned into one of the less frequented passages and sat down on a bench to rest, when one remarked to the other: "Minnie, where is ——— stopping?" She said she had forgotten, but would look, as she had written down a slip of paper in her pocket. When the scarcely remembered for that slip of paper, as it was somewhere in the big pocket in the back breadth of her dress, out came a small lace handkerchief, then a large linen one, a broken lamplet, spool of thread, pocket-book, two false teeth (her mother's probably, which she was taking to the dentist's to get fixed), a piece of white flannel, small box of face-powder, two crooked hair-pins, which looked as though they had done service as button-hooks, a thimble, one garter, paper of pins, a fan, broken comb, livery end of parasol, knife, bottle of smelling salts, two pieces of ribbon, three No. 5 soiled gloves, different colors, paper of bonbons, cigar-holder, two buttons, and at last the slip of paper she had been looking for. We didn't see anything more taken out of that pocket, so can't say whether it was empty or not; but we began to think it was like a magician's magic bag. After looking over the above inventory, who will ever dare again to abuse a small boy about the contents of his pocket?—Philadelphia Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Gorilla.

THE Philadelphia Times described in the following manner a gorilla on exhibition at the Centennial show:

Those who have read Du Chaillu's African Travels will be interested in seeing the stuffed hide of the terrible gorilla that was killed by the plucky little Frenchman in an encounter which he graphically describes. It is exhibited with the Ohio Archæological Collection, in the mineral annex of the Main Building. The exhibitor is the Mount Union College, of Alliance, Stark County, Ohio, for the museum of which it was obtained at a cost of $10,000. When this formidable beast was attacked by Du Chaillu and two negroes he wrenched the guns out of the hands of the latter, beat them in many little dutsos. There has been no actual money laid out in trap-making, so it was clear gain on the material.

Very pretty the children looked when they were ready for church. Jenny and Susan, twins of ten years old, were dressed alike, in delicate pearl color, trimmed with lilac, and hats of the newest shape and blue ribbons. Lottie wore cerise color, with cerise trimming, for Lottie was a brunette of seven.

The charges at starting for Sunday-school were:

"Be sure you lift your overskirts when you sit down; don't lean back upon the streamers of your hats, and walk where you will not spoil your light boots. Don't strain your gloves!"

"I look around you, and I see all of the men you know, select those who have 'knocked around,'" and see if they do not bear witness to the truth of every assertion I have made concerning the class they represent. Are they men you envy? I tell you, boys, 'knocking around" makes a man good for nothing else, and I take it you have a desire to be good for something higher in life.

Young men say to me, "I can't afford to marry." I always get out of patience when they say that. If you can support yourself you can support a wife. I don't mean a fashionable young lady, I mean a wife. A young couple who go to housekeeping, and exercise common sense and economy, will get along better on a less amount than it took to support the husband before marriage, even if he was careful of expenses. This excuse of not being able to marry is no excuse at all. If a young man will work before marriage, he will work more and better after. He has something to work for, and will make the most of his time and opportunities. And a true wife will do her share and be more of a help than he had ever had any idea a wife could be. Getting married is a stroke of economy.

And young man, don't get the insane idea in your head that you ought to go to the city. If you have a farm or can buy one, and know mors about farming than any other profession stick to it. The trades are overcrowded. Only superior talent pushes its way up in them. Young men are apt to get grander notions than they are capable of backing up. Don't bother to think of what you would do if you were some one else. You are yourself and you can't be anybody else, so go to work and be your honest self to the extent of your ability. I know that it is quite apt for farmer boys to think there must be some easier way to get a living than by farming, but easy work is something no man ever found. Work is work the world over—never play. If you have been brought up on a farm think a thousand times before you leave it. It will yield you a better living, year in and year out, than any of the trades you could get into, unless you have that superior talent for which you have referred to, which you probably have not. If you have this ability to make yourself master of any profession, then go into it, heart and soul, but don't mistake the wish to be something in any particular vocation, for the ability to be it. Don't give up the certain means of getting a living for the sake of trying an experiment which you may have the ability to make a success, but presumably have not. I have known scores of boys who forsook the farm for the city, and it nearly every instance they regretted the step they took and would have been glad to be back where they were, with the lesson their folly had learned them to serve them as a warning. A farmer's is the healthiest life in the world, if he sees fit to make it so. There is no profession which can be made more pleasant and attractive, if he will read and study how to do his work scientifically. Put the same amount of brains into it that the other professions demand, and it is second to none of them. It is the most noble work, and the young man who quits it because he has got the idea into his head that it is beneath him, will very likely see the time when he will set a high estimate upon having given up what he could do for something he finds, when too late, he cannot do well. And if he gets into a business that requires special training he must always remain at the foot of the ladder. So be quite sure you have talent for what you undertake before you leave the farm.

You say, in common with most young men, that you intend to settle down "some time." Then why not now? The fact that most men do intend to settle down some time shows the general opinion is that married life is the true life. It is. You can never be the man without a wife that you can be with one. Some women are not up to your mind to be such a man as you were intended to be, the better for you. Don't waste years in "knocking about." Don't put off till a more convienient season" that which constitutes the crowning act of man's highest, noblest manhood, but find some one you can love for life and make her your wife. Then, and not till then, you will understand what the possibilities of your life are.

Boys, don't "knock about." Get yourself and your name somewhere. If you take this prescription for future happiness, resolving to do the "best that in you lies" to make the most of life, you will never regret it.

Sincerely, DIO LEWIS.

IF YOU LOVE ME.

If you love me, tell me not;
Let me read it in your thought;
Let no feel lift the way
That you say an eyes and say:

Let me see it in plain eye
When you greet or pass me by;
Let me hear it in the tone
Meant for me and me alone

If you love me, you will be Something only I shall see;
Most or mine me, stay or go,
If you love me, I shall know

Something in your tone will tell,
Dear, if you you love you well;
Something in your eyes will shine
Fairer that they look in mine

In your mien some touch of grace,
Some soft smile upon your face
While you speak to me, will betray
What your lips could scarcely say

In your speech some silver word,
Tuning into sweet accord,
All your blandness will reveal,
Unaware, the love I feel.

If you love me, then, I pray,
Tell me not, but, day by day,
Let love silent on me rise,
Like the sun's unclouded eyes.

A STRUGGLE FOR APPEARANCE.

"I HAVE tickets for the concert tonight, Annie," said James Henley, coming into the sitting-room, where his wife was working the sewing-machine with a busy whirr.

"Oh, James, how I wish I could go!"

The light died away from the husband's face in a second.

"Wish you could go, Annie! Why, of course you can go."

"I can't, James. I must finish these three dresses before Sunday, and it will take every minute."

"Three dresses?"

"For Jennie, Susan and Lottie. All the spring things are ready but these dresses."

"But this is only Wednesday."

"I know, James, but look at the work. There are seventeen tucks each, and ruffles on all the waists. Jennie's has three flounces. All the children in the congregation are well-dressed, James. You cannot afford to put the wrong one," I must do it."

"Let the children dress more simply, then. Come, Annie, stop that buzz for once, and come to this concert."

"Can't you go?"

"And leave you? I should not enjoy it, if I knew you were stitching here. Come."

With a heavy sigh, as if James were exacting a sacrifice instead of giving her a pleasure, Annie left the room, and went to her own apartment to dress for the evening.

All through the evening, while her husband drank in the sweet sounds in which he delighted, Annie, with here fancy baths interested, was thinking of the unfinished work.

"Was it not delightful?" James said, as they walked home in the soft spring moonlight.

"Delightful! I am glad I went, James; Mrs. Gordon had on her new spring dress, and her dresses all come from London. The trimming of her basque is trimmed. Her cuffs and collar are of the finest lace, and I am sure I can put Jennie's on in the same way."

Sunday morning shone clear and cloudless. Mrs. Dudley had put the last stitch into Lottie's dress as the clock struck twelve, and she wakened with a pain in her chest and headache, and a burning sensation in her feet. Her children would wear their new things, that had cost nothing but the material. Nothing? Mrs. Henley did not estimate her own time at a price, the weariness, the neglect of many little duties. There has been no actual money laid out in trap-making, so it was clear gain on the material.

Very pretty the children looked when they were ready for church. Jenny and Susan, twins of ten years old, were dressed alike, in delicate pearl color, trimmed with lilac, and hats of the newest shape and blue ribbons. And young man, don't get the insane idea in your head that you ought to go to the city. If you have a farm or can buy one, and know mors about farming than any other profession stick to it. The trades are overcrowded. Only superior talent pushes its way up in them. Young men are apt to get grander notions than they are capable of backing up. Don't bother to think of what you would do if you were some one else. You are yourself and you can't be anybody else, so go to work and be your honest self to the extent of your ability. I know that it is quite apt for farmer boys to think there must be some easier way to get a living than by farming, but easy work is something no man ever found. Work is work the world over—never play. If you have been brought up on a farm think a thousand times before you leave it. It will yield you a better living, year in and year out, than any of the trades you could get into, unless you have that superior talent for which you have referred to, which you probably have not. If you have this ability to make yourself master of any profession, then go into it, heart and soul, but don't mistake the wish to be something in any particular vocation, for the ability to be it. Don't give up the certain means of getting a living for the sake of trying an experiment which you may have the ability to make a success, but presumably have not. I have known scores of boys who forsook the farm for the city, and in nearly every instance they regretted the step they took and would have been glad to be back where they were, with the lesson their folly had learned them to serve them as a warning. A farmer's is the healthiest life in the world, if he sees fit to make it so. There is no profession which can be made more pleasant and attractive, if he will read and study how to do his work scientifically. Put the same amount of brains into it that the other professions demand, and it is second to none of them. It is the most noble work, and the young man who quits it because he has got the idea into his head that it is beneath him, will very likely see the time when he will set a high estimate upon having given up what he could do for something he finds, when too late, he cannot do well. And if he gets into a business that requires special training he must always remain at the foot of the ladder. So be quite sure you have talent for what you undertake before you leave the farm.

You say, in common with most young men, that you intend to settle down "some time." Then why not now? The fact that most men do intend to settle down some time shows the general opinion is that married life is the true life. It is. You can never be the man without a wife that you can be with one. Some women are not up to your mind to be such a man as you were intended to be, the better for you. Don't waste years in "knocking about." Don't put off till a more convienient season" that which constitutes the crowning act of man's highest, noblest manhood, but find some one you can love for life and make her your wife. Then, and not till then, you will understand what the possibilities of your life are.

Boys, don't "knock about." Get yourself and your name somewhere. If you take this prescription for future happiness, resolving to do the "best that in you lies" to make the most of life, you will never regret it.

Sincerely, DIO LEWIS.

A Wedding at the Centennial.

BUT the event of the foreign society has been a wedding at the Exhibition. A hundred years hence it will be earnest to give all the gossip and detail which can be gathered about this pretty incident. Now a mere picture of the scene is all that is permissible. To begin with, the evening was extraordinarily beautiful. Sunset in the west and a storm in the east mingled their hues mysteriously, and filled the atmosphere with a suffused light of magic richness in which the landscape gleamed like an enchanted region, and the hand-faced Philadelphia houses glowed with the soft intensity of Venetian palace-fronts; the antiskey was like a strange, pure cerulean lake bordered by rippled sands of amber, over which hung a rainbow bridge; the western horizon was roseate, barred with heavy purple, fused and reflected below in the Schuylkill in a darker, ruddier mass of color, across which rolled black smoke with flashes of crimson, from earth-born suns, producing the most magnificent combination. Like one of Turner's great canvases. The city—and beyond, before it—was ablaze with a full glare, by night, from rows of gas-lit saloons of fancifir exterior; a pious pilgrim might deem it a street in Vanity Fair—and Thackeray, but Bunyan's. But inside the gates it was fairy-land: lamps sparkling among the foliage up and down the long avenues and dells, the vast dark outlines of the exhibition buildings defined by the subtined light within. Agricultural Hall, silent and dark, with its cathedral-like roof and towers, all its windows aglow with mellow radiance, looked like a great church awaiting some mystic midnight rites. The marriage took place in the Judges' Pavilion. The body of the building is taken up by a great hall of the proportions, with an arched and fluscoed roof; an open-work gallery, handsome but not heavy, runs round three sides; at the upper end an arrangement of shrubbery, flowers and flags improvised a sort of chapel or chancel, and the door at the lower end was draped with the American colors. The company divided into two lines on opposite sides of the room, leaving a wide space open down the entire length, and the light summer dresses of the women, the prevalence of uniforms, the stately, bland bearing of the foreigners of Latin race which makes us so still yet nervous American Anglos, nor our British brethren, nor our cousins German ever wholly acquire; combined to give great elegance and distinction to the general aspect of the assemblage. It looked official, diplomatic. The scene was drawing-room details, which are generally conspicuous in all except church weddings, conferred a grandé air on the occasion which is quite unusual on so royally married. Mendelssohn's Wedding-March burst forth from an invisible band, and the bridal party entered the hall under the folds of the star-spangled banner, and swept up between the ranks of friends to where the clergyman was waiting for them. It was a pretty group: the minister in his flowing gown and ruff; the graceful, girlish bride, pale and trembling, but calm, with her crown of myrtle, a little Queen's crown; according to her National custom; the bridegroom in his uniform; a little withdrawn, the circle of the parents, the fresh-faced and fair-haired bridesmaids, and more uniforms. The service, pronounced in Swedish, had a hearty, homely sound which gave a pleasant sense of remote familiarity even to those who understood it not. The minister's hands laid each on the head of the newly-married pair during the Lord's Prayer, which concluded the ceremony, which was followed by a benediction.—Characteristics of the International Fair, September Atlantic.

Chinese Telescope Fish.

MR. DARWIN wished for a further instance in support of his theory of the origin of species, he might possibly find one in some curious fish which has been brought to this country and added to the collection in the Brighton Aquarium. These fish are called "telescope fish," from the remarkable length of their organs of vision, which project a considerable distance from the side of the head. They are natives of China, and the stories which have been circulated concerning this peculiar feature of their formation, have generally been received with great incredulity.

In large specimens the eyes are placed on the extremity of a cylindrical projection as much as an inch in length, and when, at last, individual fish found their way to Europe they were so soldierly to this distinct species. A further peculiarity is in the formation of the caudal fins, which are prolonged in such a way as to give the fish the appearance of having two or more tails. These "

"No Intimidation."

There was a good deal of shouting and hushing over the Alabama victory among the northern democracy at first. But when the "true inwardness" of the movement by which that victory was secured began to develope itself, the more intelligent have thought it best to keep as still as possible about it. They have left very much like the man who had been to court and sworn to a lie and came out saying, "I thought the least said was soonest mended."

The way the work was done in that state, was not in all cases by intimidation, but by neglecting to open the polls in those districts where most of the voters were colored men, and where they were too strong to be intimidated.

We give below one quotation from the Baysville Examiner, showing what was done in one of the strong precincts of Lowndes county, in which the republicans lost about four hundred votes:

"The true and good men of Collirene, not willing to be servants to the radical party by sitting down all day just to receive the votes 300 or 400 Negroes were sandom to cast against the purse and welfare of the state, wisely commenced last Monday, that if the radical Negroes wanted to have an election they might hold it themselves, and if they didn't have sense enough to hold it they didn't have sense enough to vote at all, and therefore the county would be all the better for it. This was a just and sensible consolation, for nothing can be more loathing and ridiculous than for men to aid and abet villainous party to carry out its schemes of plunder by setting at their agents to gather in the votes of a blinded and prejudiced people. And no man who has carefully thought over the matter would be guilty of such a crime against God and his family if he could help himself. Therefore, the patriots of Collirene are hereby thanked for splendid manner in which they struck at carpet bagger and Negro rule in this state.

We do not know much about the election laws of Alabama, but if such a transaction as that described in the above quotation can occur in that or any other state in this union, then that state ought to be reduced to a territory until it can be educated up to know what is meant by that clause in the national constitution which says that congress shall guarantee to every state a republican form of government.

The chairman of the democratic committee of that state, as was to be expected from a man who planned those proceedings, has issued and caused to be published his denial of such facts as are brought out in the quotation, which only relates to one, while there were many similar occurrences in that election. In view of this denial, the chairman of the republican state committee has published a call for an inquiry into the facts.—What we say is, let the facts be brought out but where they may.

"Reform is necessary," shouted the Confederate-Democratic Convention at St. Louis, when it set up Samuel J. Tilden as a model reformer. We should think so. We have been waiting for some days to hear some disproof, some denial, or some explanation of the severe charge made against Mr Tilden concerning his pecuniary reforms in 1863 and subsequent years. Is there none? If not, reform would seem to be necessary in the methods adopted by a prominent reform Democrat to swindle the Government. Perjury is not exactly the style of reform to which Presidential candidates should be addicted. Such a charg would knock a Republican candidate for any office "higher than a kite," if not promptly and completely disproved. A few days ago Mr. Tilden made oath to receiving $20,000 in one year, 1862, from the bondholders of the St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute Railroad Company. And now it is charged that on Dec. 26, 1863, Tilden swore to a return under oath certifying that his taxable income for that same year was only $7,118. Is it possible that a candidate of the great Democratic reform party could be guilty of both perjury and fraud of that kind? If so, "reform is necessary" in his ideas of honesty in the payment of taxes, and of truthfulness under oath. "That's what's the matter." And the people will be apt to know how well convinced they are that "reform is necessary" by refusing to elect such a reformer.—Ex.

Snubbing A Republic

The mission to Switzerland has been, in effect, abolished by a refusal to make an appropriation to support it. This, says the Chicago Tribune, was the work of the Democratic members in Congress from Wisconsin for the purpose of spiting the Hon Horace Rublee, formerly the editor of the Madison State Journal, who has been the Minister to the Swiss Republic since 1869. Probably Mr Rublee will not regret being ignominiously out, as he intended coming home shortly anyway. He and his daughter lately, a beautiful and accomplished girl of eighteen, educated at Normalegg, and will bring her remains home. This business of snubbing a sister Republic is eminently characteristic of the Confederate-Democratic members of Congress. The bill by which this meanness is perpetrated directs the President to notify all diplomatic and consular officers for whose salaries no appropriation is made, to close their offices. Against this last order the President protested, as one which Congress was attempting to encroach upon the powers of the Executive as defined in the Constitution.

And now comes the Democratic Buffalo Courier with an earnest protest against the relinquish in rank of representative to the Swiss Republic. In this protest it, without saying so in specific words, gives the Democratic House a severe rap for its unpatriotic and penal partisanship and assumes the President in the position taken in his message. It looks on the withdrawal of the Minister to Switzerland as a snub to the one country of all others that for patriotic reasons we should encourage, and sympathize with. It says the Swiss emigration to this country is not itself sufficient to justify at least a minister Resident to the Swiss Confederation, but a better reason is found in the fact that aside from our own country Switzerland is the only federal Republic in the world worthy of the name. The best of existing Republics, of any consequence in the world, it has modified its Constitution so as to more nearly resemble that of the United States. There are other countries of more importance to the United States but none more entitled to sympathy and friendship of the American people. The Courier pertinently says:

It might be said that the rank and title of a diplomatic agent and his great consequence—as one Government would hardly accredit but what if a foreign power should remove the rank of its representative to the United States. Such a step would be fairly open to at least an act of discourtesy, although it would not be proper to remonstrate. This country may be under no obligations to Switzerland, not even for the fact that she too given us quite a number of worthy citizens, a great watermelon in the early days of the Republic and a great scholar in our times, but we honoring a sister Republic in the Old World the United States would honor their own form of Government and those institutions of which our people are justly proud.

It is mentioned as a sad coincidence that the journey of the Hon. T. W. Ferry, President pro tem. of the Senate, to Washington last fall, just previous to the opening of the session, was to attend the obsequies of the Vice President Wilson, presiding officer of the Senate, and his journey home at the close of the session was with the remains of Speaker Kerr, presiding officer of the House of Representatives. The serving of Mr Ferry in delaying his departure from Washington, when he received the intelligence of the death of Mr. Kerr, in order that he might pay his tribute of respect to the dead statesman and accompany his remains to their final resting place, is spoken of as appropriate, and the many friends of the deceased Speaker express their appreciation of the thoughtful course of the presiding officer of the Senate.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick or afflicted. THE bronze and copper mines of Josephine County, Or., have attracted the attention of men who will work them.

THE Georgia gold miners claim to beat the Black Hills' fellows "all hollow" in finding rich quartz, coarse gold and nuggets.

SO MANY of the hotels and restaurants in this city have lowered their prices that the reduction is likely soon to be made general. The new scale of prices is near that which prevailed before the war.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE fall in silver has occasioned a shrinkage of nearly $31,000,000 in the values of the Nevada mines. To-day Consolidated Virginia is selling at $65 equal to $975 for the old shares, and California $68, equal to $200 on the old stock. Both mines will this month pay the usual dividend of $20 per share, the one drawing from its surplus to meet the demand.

THE agent of the Fall River cotton manufacturers, who was sent to South America several months ago to open a market for American fabrics, sends home most encouraging reports of the success of his negotiations, and suggests that a large trade can be established. The aggregate exports of cotton goods for 1874 from the United States to the six principal States in South America were only $2,203,400, while Great Britain shipped them nearly $40,000,000, and France within a fraction of $5,000,000.

DESPITE the improvements "now going on" in the city, and our constant complaining as to the railroad earnings for the past seven months, as reported, show an increase of about seven and one-half per cent. over those of the corresponding months last year. The earnings for July show a decrease of nearly three-fourths of one per cent. which is attributed to the hot weather which prevailed almost all through that month.

A NEW and extensive sulphur bed has recently been discovered in Washington Territory. The sulphur is imbedded in a light colored formation situated in Seattle, which is half a mile in width, and can be traced north and south for about a mile. The mine has been opened to a depth of some twenty feet, and the sulphur is abundantly met with in the shape of crystalized bunches. It assays about seventy-five per cent. of pure article, and is worth fifty dollars a ton in San Francisco.

ACCORDING to records carefully kept, says the New York Sun, of a trustworthy instrument hanging in a dusty place, and not exposed to reflected heat, the month of July was the hottest we have had in New York for nearly sixty years. The mean temperature was 81.8 degrees. The nearest approach to it was in 1866. It was then 78.5, 3.4 degrees lower. The lowest mean July was in 1837, which was 72.33 degrees, a difference 7.5 degrees. Until the 22d ult., the mean temperature was above 80 degrees, and on the 19th, 20th and 21st was above 90 degrees till the 30th. On the 9th the maximum was 100 degrees, and on the 24th the minimum was 70 degrees, a range of 30 degrees. Rain fell on thirteen days—on the 2nd and 31st, 2.45 inches. Heavy showers fell on the 11th, in all 0.80 inches. The average temperature for twenty-one years (1855-75) was 74.61 degrees; last month was 3.54 warmer. The mean in this city for forty-three years is 58.54 degrees.

Our Common Humanity.

IT is the same in Cairo or New Jersey. The other day when a Turkish with sunken eyes and high cheek-bones sat down on the steps of a grocery beside several others, he sighed heavily and asked:

"Gentlemen, if any of you found a five on the sidewalk, would you hunt for the owner?"

He was met with a roar from each individual with promptness and dispatch.

"Haven't any of you lost a five, have you?" anxiously continued the man.

"I have," answered one, and the echo went all along the line.

"Describe her, gentlemen," he remarked.

One said his had a flame "O" on it. Another had his had a picture of Horace Greeley on the Mississippi River. A third said the words United States were visible in the sun on the bill that fell out of his vest pocket.

"Gentlemen, this five don't talk," mentally remarked the Turkish. "None of you have hit the description which a knife and a card-bag."

"Isn't a five," asked one of three at once.

"It's a five, and I found it on the walk," he whispered, holding out his hand.

The five was a ticket. Some of the crowd leaned back and held their hands on their outraged hearts, while others rose up, carefully brushed their coat-tails, and said it was time to go home. Only one of the victims seemed to appreciate the situation. He chuckled and gurgled and gasped, and asked the stranger what he would take.

"Whisky straight," was the prompt reply.

"No—would I if I ever drank," responded the citizen, and he lounged down town to get up a bet on the weather.—Daily Nut-Shell.

THE unfeeling New York World takes us on having bad experience, and mildly asks: "As between a highway man and a grass-widow, which is the more to be feared?"

FIVE noblemen dined in the German at the Ocean House, Newport, the other morning. The ladies were so excited that they danced "perfectly horrid," to quote their own words.

A CLERGYMAN said the other day that modern young ladies were not daughters of Shem and Ham; but daughters of Him and Shan—young carriages for ugly show; a decrease of nearly three-fourths of one per cent. which is attributed to the hot weather which prevailed almost all through that month.

A NEW and extensive sulphur bed has recently been discovered in Washington Territory. The sulphur is imbedded in a light colored formation situated in Seattle, which is half a mile in width, and can be traced north and south for about a mile. The mine has been opened to a depth of some twenty feet, and the sulphur is abundantly met with in the shape of crystalized bunches. It assays about seventy-five per cent. of pure article, and is worth fifty dollars a ton in San Francisco.

ACCORDING to records carefully kept, says the New York Sun, of a trustworthy instrument hanging in a dusty place, and not exposed to reflected heat, the month of July was the hottest we have had in New York for nearly sixty years. The mean temperature was 81.8 degrees. The nearest approach to it was in 1866. It was then 78.5, 3.4 degrees lower. The lowest mean July was in 1837, which was 72.33 degrees, a difference 7.5 degrees. Until the 22d ult., the mean temperature was above 80 degrees, and on the 19th, 20th and 21st was above 90 degrees till the 30th. On the 9th the maximum was 100 degrees, and on the 24th the minimum was 70 degrees, a range of 30 degrees. Rain fell on thirteen days—on the 2nd and 31st, 2.45 inches. Heavy showers fell on the 11th, in all 0.80 inches. The average temperature for twenty-one years (1855-75) was 74.61 degrees; last month was 3.54 warmer. The mean in this city for forty-three years is 58.54 degrees.

Our Common Humanity.

IT is the same in Cairo or New Jersey. The other day when a Turkish with sunken eyes and high cheek-bones sat down on the steps of a grocery beside several others, he sighed heavily and asked:

"Gentlemen, if any of you found a five on the sidewalk, would you hunt for the owner?"

He was met with a roar from each individual with promptness and dispatch.

"Haven't any of you lost a five, have you?" anxiously continued the man.

"I have," answered one, and the echo went all along the line.

"Describe her, gentlemen," he remarked.

One said his had a flame "O" on it. Another had his had a picture of Horace Greeley on the Mississippi River. A third said the words United States were visible in the sun on the bill that fell out of his vest pocket.

"Gentlemen, this five don't talk," mentally remarked the Turkish. "None of you have hit the description which a knife and a card-bag."

"Isn't a five," asked one of three at once.

"It's a five, and I found it on the walk," he whispered, holding out his hand.

The five was a ticket. Some of the Tricks of Indian Servants.

DOMESTIC servants in India occasionally display an amount of ingenuity in dealing with their employers which would not discredit their European brethren. A Calcutta paper relates that a Khitmatgar in the employ of a gentleman in that city, having the other day completed his month and feeling disinclined to remain in the service of his employer, probably because he had a better engagement elsewhere, feigned illness at the end of his month and took leave earlier than usual. The following morning his employer was waited upon by a host of people, men and women, who, claiming relationship with the dead servant, affixed themselves as if in mourning, and, exhibiting the deepest emotion, announced, with tears in their eyes, the death from cholera of the unfortunate man, at the same time begging the master to pay up the "dhus," which were urgently required to defray funeral expenses.

The master, sympathizing with their distress, "paid up," and even offered to meet the charges attending the demise, when it was ascertained that the man reported "dead" was in perfect health, in good spirits, and employed elsewhere. The ruse was discovered by one of the native servants observing a woman, relative of the alleged deceased, carrying off the ornaments, which, if his sleight had been a fact, she would, according to native rites and ceremonies, be privileged from using.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Longevity of Brain-Workers.

THAT great thinkers and hard brain-workers are long lived is asserted, with a considerable array of facts, in a volume by Dr. Beard. He presents a list of some 500 of the most eminent names in history, including a number like Pascal, Mozart, Keats and others who died young, and finds the average of the 500 to have been over sixty-four years. As this is far beyond the average of farmers, mechanics and business men, he concludes that the wear and tear of brain work is not so exhausting as is commonly supposed, and that it rarely shortens life. The London Spectator, however, reviewing this theory maintains that excessive mental toil must shorten life, and did evidently shorten it in the case of many of the 500 cited; but they had originally more vigorous constitutions and a large amount of vital force, and, by virtue of their superior vitality which explains in part, also, their superior brain power, they were able to continue hard work even to old age, before breaking down under the pressure; though the same vital force would have prolonged life for many years if they had not exhausted it prematurely.

SHALL REBELS TAKE THE HELM?

A hall rebels take the ship of State
Who planned her wreck in guilty hate!
Shall simpletons who sought to hook
And sawed her on her sandy rocks
Now take the helm?
The answer comes—in bill and sniller thirty!
And millions shout in clarionet accents, "No!"

Shall ingrates entrusted to the hand
That bestowed them with liberal hand,
Shall these, who enslaved before
Shall these be trusted as of yore
To take the helm?
Hear ye that cry! it comes of anger wove
The millions shout in clarionet accents, "No!"

Shall reversals to the Nation's trust,
Who first our banner in the dust,
Who set our glories to scoff and wreck,
Shall such be again to mock the deck
And take the helm?
Shall such as these sad fate decree
To guide our country's destiny,
Or, fend the flag that rent should be?
Alas! my country, then, for thee
When there's the helm
Of over dozen plains and mountains copied with the clarionet accents, and echoing answers "No!"

Dangers of a Restoration of the Democratic Party to Power.

SENATOR SHERMAN, in a recent address at Marietta, O., spoke as follows of the dangers of restoring the Democratic party to power:

As a forecaste of what is meant by a Democratic restoration, we have now a Democratic House of Representatives, sixty-six men who served in the rebel army or rebel Congress are making laws for the people. They are arraigning Ben Grant and other conspicuous leaders of the Union army. They have turned out Union soldiers who bear honorable wounds from petty offices to make way for rebel officers. They passed a bill to make Confederate officers eligible for service in the army of the United States. The whole tone, conduct and policy of these men is the same as when I was a member of the Senate during the war. They talk about the "revolution," but neither acknowledge the results nor respect the great changes in the Constitution which we hoped had been secured by the war. Let us see what will be the result if their power in the House is extended to the Senate and Presidential office.

When the war closed, innumerable claims against the United States were made from the falsely elected States, and Congress, in the generous, liberal spirit, made provision for the payment of all that by the well-settled rules of civilized war, could be properly made against the United States. The officers of the House, the Senate, the Supreme Court, the Court of Claims and the Southern Claims Commission were authorized to adjust and pay different classes of claims, and Congress passed many acts for equitable relief; so that it may safely be said that not a dollar of the $100,000,000 was paid after the war was over to citizens of the South for losses caused by the Rebellion. But this extreme liberality only gave zest to the prosecution of claims against the United States, that, if allowed, would double the National debt. These claims now endanger our whole financial system. I have here in my hand a list of 180 separate claims now pending in the Democratic House of Representatives, amounting to $1,582,369, every one of which is for injuries caused by our army in rebel States during the war. Here is another bill introduced in the Senate by Mr Merrimon, of North Carolina, to revive the claims which existed in the South prior to April 15, 1861, in favor of persons "who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion." These include Postmasters, Custom-House officers, and other agents of the government who, at the beginning of the war, paid over to the Confederate States the balance due from them to the United States.

At the close of the war, when every loyal man, employment, trade or production of the loyal States was heavily taxed to meet the enormous cost of the war, Congress placed upon cotton a tax of three cents a pound. This produced, from 1865 to 1868, the sum of $68,252,986, and was then repealed. It was the only tax ever levied on the staple of the South, when the aggregate taxes collected in the loyal States was still $400,000,000 for one year. This collection was charged by the producers as a tax consumer when the cotton was sold, and was scarcely felt by the planter who raised the cotton. And yet enormous cost of the war, Congress passed a measure for the refunding of this cotton tax, not to the men who paid it, but to the States in which it was paid, and, as sure as fate, this tax will be refunded by the next Congress after the Democratic party is restored to power.

As our troops penetrated into the South the cotton was seized as leading property of the States as the property of the enemy, and much of it was the property of Confederate States, and the proceeds were covered into the Treasury. Over $70,000,000 were thus covered into the Treasury, and of this sum $11,248,237 has been awarded and paid by the Court of Claims to claimants who had either legal or equitable claims to the fund. The residue of the fund is now eagerly demanded by open thieves, but who, as leading Democratic papers may have to explain what they lost by the war. Here is the list of fifteen different bills, now pending in the Democratic House of Representatives. Mind this each one of these claims, and the proceeds of captured or abandoned property authorized to pass upon such claims, and the magnitude of such claims.

Remember, fellow-citizens, that the late Slave States have now 100 members in the House of Representatives. The Northern States have but 133. The addition for the basis of the new States, including the one additional member for each State, will be ten, and the Democratic party, by solid vote against the Union States, will have a majority of 17 in the House of Representatives. Add to this the vote of the Senate, and the Democratic party will be supreme in the Government. Its first act will be to repeal the legal-tender clause of the law, and then will follow the payment of the rebel debt, the payment for slaves, the payment for cotton taken or furnished during the Rebellion for the use of the armies of the South, including the use all loss of vessels or boats while in the service of the enemy of the United States, may institute suit against the United States in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and recover such damages for the detention, loss or destruction of such vessels or boats may have been taken or furnished, or such vessels or boats may have been lost.

Reflect, a moment. All officers of the United States, while in the late rebellion, citizens, having claims for stores or supplies furnished during the rebellion for the use of the army, including the use and loss of vessels or boats while in the service

THE NEWS.

AT HOME.

DIRECTOR LANDERMAN reports that all the mines are now running on subsidiary silver coin to their full capacity, and that the monthly coinage of silver aggregates about $2,500,000.

THE counsel for Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in the suit for alleged malicious prosecution brought by Francis H. Morrison, have severed upon the latter's counsel notice of application for a change of venue on the ground that the selection of an impartial jury in Brooklyn is impossible.

IN the 20th the attendance at the Centennial Exhibition was greater than on any previous day. Number of paid admissions, 36,272; total admissions, including passes, 104,514. Receipts during the week ending on the 25th, $108,000.

ON the evening of the 26th a man named George E. Adams was arrested at Buffalo, N. Y., who confessed that he threw the Lake Shore trains off at Lake View and Northeast, Pa., causing the death of a man at the latter point, also that his home was at Fairport near Rochester, by which he served a New York Central train by keeping a farmer near and killing him that he had seen several men tear up the rails was a mere pretense, and that he had misplaced the track himself. He says that his object was to create sympathy with the railroads, and then get employment that he invented the flag the trains use the Lake Shore Road, but was too late in both cases. Adams was turned by a brakeman on the Lake Shore & Michigan Railroad.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 28th says twenty-eight employes of the Pension Office had been notified that their resignations would be accepted.

Interesting Story of a Young Girl's Adventures.

IN the city of Toronto lives a widow named Mary Goodman, who has a daughter Lizzie. Early in May, 1875, the girl suddenly disappeared from her home, and from that time until Saturday, although much money and time were expended in searching for her, Mrs. Goodman could get no trace. The story of her sudden disappearance and subsequent experiences, as told by the girl, are exceedingly interesting. At the time of leaving home Miss Goodman was but twelve years old. Her family and social surroundings are such that had attracted the attention of the manager of a peripatetic varieties show, who, by offers of a good salary, enticed her away from home. After two months' travel she found herself in Piemont, Ohio, where the show had broken up, the manager having left the party penniless and in debt. Thrown upon her own resources and afraid to go home, Miss Goodman secured work as nurse girl in a respectable family in Fremont, where she worked nearly six months. Then she moved to Toledo, where she secured similar employment and held her place until last June when she came to this city. Having a little money she engaged board at a cheap lodging house and set out in search of work. She met with no success, and at last found that she was not only out of work but without money. Still afraid to write home and not knowing what to do, she accepted work in Stewart & Cameron's saloon, at the corner of Randolph and Congress streets, where she worked until last Friday evening.

Four or five weeks ago officer Benjamin Hight attracted by the childish appearance of the girl, found out where she boarded and put the landlady on the trail with the request that she question her boarder and ascertain something of her history. The landlady did her part well, and the result was that Hight was enabled to correspond with Mrs. Goodman. Saturday the mother and daughter were reunited and the morning train for Toronto yesterday bore homeward the thankful girl and her still more thankful mother.—Detroit Free Press.

THE celebrated chemist, Hr. Dorrmus, showed in the following manner, in a recent lecture, how extremes meet: Eggs can be cooked by the extreme of cold as well as by the extreme of heat. Butter can be made by churning, or else it can be turned. We may by the agency of this solubility many of the other liquid substances, and, indeed, many of the gaseous, but a more unmanageable degree of cold is used, and we employ laughing gas. This laughing gas, which is heavy, is the carbonic acid we have shown; when squeezed sufficiently by the pump it becomes as beautiful and pellucid a liquid as carbonic acid, and if allowed to remain loosed screened upon a shovel it boils like a shoe. He left behind him a few words written on a paper collar, politely apologizing to the Captain for having made free with the life-preserver, and promising to remit to the Secretary of the Treasury a sum sufficient to cover the loss. No person could be father, but as nothing has been heard of the desperate navigator it is feared that he will never visit. The name of the astounding genius is Samuel B. IF you have your houses insured, and are anxious to collect the insurance money, it will be a good plan when you go about your house at night to light matches to see by, instead of taking the trouble to light a lamp. Throw down the match as soon as it begins to scorch; your fingers, and do not take the trouble to see where it falls. It is not worth while to caution children against this habit while you keep up the practice yourself. It will not make much difference if the house does "burn down in good hands."

If this method fails, lay matches around wherever it comes handiest. Have no particular place for them, and let the children have a bunch to play with up in the garret. I saw the top of a large hotel burned off one Sunday by this very simple process. Even mice rummaging among a pantry will subdue away at wax matches, and often give one a start with their sharp little teeth. A box was found in a store which had been knocked off the shelf during the night, and every match lighted. The box was so close that the fire was smothered down, or there would have been a big insurance bill to collect.

A great many fires come from bad stove-pipe arrangements, and flues that are not well lined with mortar. A very little crack in the chimney, as every brick-layer knows, is quite sufficient for a spark to fly through. If it chances to light in the paper-box, it will very likely soon be in a blaze.

Do not go to sleep and allow others to go with a light into a clothes closet at night.

If you allow the practice of lighting fires with kerosene at your house, you will very likely have many surgical and undertakers' bills to pay out of your insurance money.

A friend named his barn down in a very easy way. He went out one night to fodder, and struck a match against the door-casing. The flame caught on the dust and lint and boards of wheat that fell off of chaff that had settled there, and ran up the timber like a streak of lightning. It caught the hay overhead, and in twenty minutes the barn took fire on the ground. Some valuable stock burned up, besides all the grain just harvested, and all the farming implements housed there.

Housewives often lay little fire traps snugly away in their closets un-beknown to any one but you yourself, and you will find that it gives out cold.

OLD SAYINGS IN RHYME

As room as a cheer is money,
As thin as a rail;
As fat as a porpoise,
As rough as a gale;
As brazen as a lion,
As sure as a gun;
As bright as a sixpence,
As sick as a cat.

As proud as a peacock,
As shy as a bee;
As mad as a March hare,
As strong as an ox;
As fair as a lily,
As empty as air;
As rich as a Croesus,
As green as a leek.

As pure as an angel,
As neat as a pin;
As smart as a steel trap,
As ugly as sin;
As dead as a door-nail,
As white as a sheet;
As fat as a pig-cake,
As red as a beet.

As round as an apple,
As black as your hat;
As brown as a berry,
As blind as a bat;
As crazy as a loon,
As full as a tick;
As plump as a partridge,
As short as a stick.

As clean as a penny,
As dark as a pall;
As hard as a millstone,
As fitful as gall;
As fierce as a lion,
As clear as a bell;
As dry as a lecture,
As deep as a well.

As limp as a feather,
As hard as a rock,
As cold as a pickle,
As calm as a clock,
As green as a gooseberry,
As lank as a bear,
And now let me stop
Lest you weary of me.

THE RIGHT BOWER.

IT was Judge Larrington's own expressed opinion.

Half a dozen lawyers, fresh from their studies, and just admitted to the bar, were listening to his wisdom. The old jurist was in a communicative mood.

"Young men," he said, "whatever may be your strait, never take a case before a jury, or before any court, unless you have your right bower for a lead."

If the reader surmises from this that the old Judge was fond of euchre, he will not have surmised amiss.

The young men looked at him inquiringly.

"I mean," he added, "that you shall never advocate a cause into the work of which you cannot enter with a clear conscience. You shall never accept a client whose cause you do not believe to be just."

"Can that rule always be adhered to?" asked one of the listeners.

"It can," answered Judge Larrington, emphatically. "It is a lawyer's firm rock of foundation, and the only sure point of departure to the respect and confidence of his fellows."

"Have you always followed that rule, Judge?"

"I was never tempted from it, of course," he replied. "———, will you call my next case? I think you would like to hear it."

Of course they would like to; and, having had aside his pipe, the old man began:

"One day I was waited upon by a man who gave his name as Leban Sarfurt. He was of middle-age, well-dressed, and at first sight appeared to be a gentleman; but his situation was dispelled when approaching business. He was hard and unfeeling, and naturally a villain. Success in speculation had saved him from becoming a thief or highwayman. I heard of him as a heavy dealer in the up-river lands. He asked me if I was willing to undertake a job which would pull me in Shireton. I told him I was open to anything legitimate that would pay."

"Mr. Larrington," said he, tapping me with coarse familiarity on the arm, "I want to secure your services; you must not be engaged on the other side."

"I told him if he would explain to me the case I might be better able to give him an answer. He bit an enormous quid of tobacco from a black plug, and having got it into shape between his jaws he went on with his story.

"The case is one of ejectment. An elderly man named Philip Acton, had died leaving a valuable estate. There was nearly 1,000 acres of land, with opportunities for developing immense water power; and ere many years that land would be worth more than $1,000,000. At present upon the estate, and claiming it as a son of the deceased, was a man calling himself William Acton.

"'But,' said Sarfurt, 'the is not a legitimate heir at all. His mother was Betsy Tatwood, at one time a girl in Acton's employ. Acton, I know, was never married. He brought the boy up and educated him, and now the fellow thinks he will step into his protector's shoes. I can prove that I am the only living relative of Philip Acton. He was my uncle—my mother's brother—and, to a lawyer as smart as you, there can be no difficulty in proving my title. I can bring the witnesses to your hand."

"He told me he would give me five hundred dollars if I would undertake the case, and an additional thousand if I gained it. That was a big temptation for a poor man, and all my pleading. It was tempting. And yet I saw that it was not yet perfectly clear—not entirely honest. It was not improbable that Philip Acton had married Betsy Tatwood, and that William was his legitimate heir. It struck me that Leban Sarfurt was a villain, and that he fancied he had young Acton so far in his power that he could eject him from the title. But what had I particularly to do with that? If I accepted a client, I must serve him. I had no business but to serve his interest. I finally told Mr. Sarfurt that I would think the matter over. I should probably have business in Shireton during the session of the court, and I would call on him there and examine more fully. I could not take his retainer until I had further light."

"But," said he, "will you promise not to take up for the other side?"

"I told him I would do nothing without further consultation with him."

"Because," he added, "if you are not I am sure to win. Acton can't find a lawyer that can hold a candle to you. I know them all."

"So matters stood. I believed him or not, I did not feel flattered."

"Two weeks later I received a letter from Sarfurt, promising me $5,000 if I won.

"The $5,000 was a strong argument. Was not law really a game of chance, in which the strongest hand and longest purse must win? I told myself yes. Yes—and I sat down and wrote a reply, saying that I would take the case. But I did not mail it at once. That night I put it under my pillow, and slept over it; and on the following morning I threw it into the fire. I would not make up my mind until I had seen other parties—until I had been on the grounds. And I wrote to Leban Sarfurt to wait.

"Two weeks later I harnessed my horse to the wagon, and, with my wife and child, started for Shireton. I had been married two years, and our little babe, a girl, was a year old, our pride, our pet, and our darling. Shireton was a distance of about thirty miles. We had been having rainy weather for a week or so, and it had now cleared off bright and beautiful. We stopped and took dinner at a wayside inn, four miles beyond which was a stream which must be forded. The innkeeper told me that the stream was dangerous, that it was swollen from the late rains, but that if my horse was trusty there could be no danger.

"I arrived at the stream, the Wampsuck River. I found the water indeed risen, and the current strong, but I saw that others had recently gone over, and I resolved to venture. I urged my horse, and had faith in him. My wife was anxious, but she trusted my judgment. A third of the way across the water was shallow, but a little more and it would have reached the body of the wagon. I began to be alarmed; I feared I had left the ford too much. Presently my horse stumbled and staggered, having evidently stepped on a moving stone. The wagon swayed and tipped, and the baby was jerked from my wife's lap and slipped, and in a moment more we were in the water. With one hand I grasped the harness upon the horse and with the other I held my wife. I was struggling. When a wild cry from her lips startled me. She was washed away.

"Oh, my soul! I cannot tell you what I felt as I saw those moments. I could not help our darling. If I left my wife she was lost. I clung to the horse and clung to my shrieking wife—snatching at the coarse mane for dear life. In the distance, upon the bosom of the surging flood, I could see on little one, her white dress gleaming in the sun, her golden hair waving. In a moment more and I saw a man plunge from the bank into the river. I saw this man rapidly nearing the shore, and ere long my wife and I were on dry land, with the horse and wagon. As soon as I was sure my wife was safe, I left her to care for the horse while I posted off down the river bank in quest of the swimmer and the child.

"You may well understand that all this time I was frantic. I was a maniac losing operated upon by a surging and agonizing emotion. How long or how far I wandered I do not know; but at length I met a man, wet and dripping, with my darling in his arms, my darling safe and sound. He told me that he had caught the child within a few rods of the falls, and that in landing he had cleared the fatal abyss by not more than two yards. He was a young man, not more than twenty-five, handsome and stalwart. He said he had seen my wagon tip, and was coming to my assistance when he saw the child washed away. 'I threw my life into the balance,' said he, with a genial smile, 'and, thank God! both the lives were saved!'

"I asked him how I should ever repay him. He stopped me with an imploring gesture:

"'If you talk of more pay than I have already received,' he said, 'if you can rob one of the only solid reward I can claim, mercy! if saving the life of such a cherub is not enough of reward in itself, then hard is the heart that craves more.' And, with moistened eyes, he told me that he had a child of his own at home—an only child of very nearly the same age.

"I asked if he would tell me his name. With a smile, he answered that his name did not matter—he was not sure that he had a name. I then asked him if he knew me. He nodded, and said he thought I might be Mr. Larlington, of Walbridge. When I told him he was correct he said that he must hurry home. And with that he turned away. I was too deeply moved to stop him, and when he had disappeared I started to rejoin my wife with a dawning impression that the man might be slightly deranged. But my darling was safe—her blood, flesh, cheek had floated out and kept her head above water until I went on my way rejoicing, resolved that the preserver of my child should not be forgotten.

"I will not tell you of the emotion of my wife when she held her child once more in her arms. We reached Shireton before night, and found quarters at a comfortable tavern.

"On the following day Leban Sarfurt called upon me and was about to spread his evidence for my inspection, when I interrupted him. I told him I should not accept his commission until I had made up my mind to take his case in hand. Something seemed to whisper that there was danger ahead. I did not feel comfortable in that man's presence. I felt as though he was trying to buy me. The court would sit in four days. I told him I would give him a final answer in two days from that.

"That evening I made a confidant of my wife, and asked her what I should do. 'If I take the case,' I said, 'I am sure of $5,000. She bade me do what was right. 'God has been very kind to us,' she said, 'let us look to him for guidance.'

"After this I called on the clergyman of the place, whose son had been my classmate in college, and whom I had once before visited. He received me heartily, and by and by I asked him about William Acton. The result of all he told me was summed up in these words: 'I would go on.'

"I am sure William Acton was Philip Acton's child—in fact, I know it—and I am confident that Philip and Betsy were married. The mother died very soon after her child was born, and we know that Philip always treated the boy as his legitimate child; and that he was fond him as such I can confidently affirm.'

"On the following morning, after breakfast, as I sat by the window in the bar-room, I saw coming down the road the man who had saved my child. He was walking slowly, like one in trouble. I pointed him out to my host, and asked him who he was. 'That is William Acton. Perhaps you have heard of the trouble he is likely to have with Leban Sarfurt?'

"I said I had heard.

"'I hope he will come out all right,' the host added, 'but I am fearful. He has got a hard and heartless customer to deal with.'

"I slipped my money and my peace until Leban Sarfurt called for his final answer. I said to him:

"'Mr. Sarfurt, I have been considering all the time that has passed since I undertake your case with a clear conscience—whether I should be helping the side of justice and right in helping you. I had resolved that I could not do so before I had seen William Acton, to know him by name. I now know him for a man who nobly risked his own life to save the life of my child, for that deed I will reward him if I can. I have not as yet accepted one of your private disclosures; I have gained from you nothing which you would wish to keep from the public. I cannot take your case, but, I tell you frankly, that if you prosecute, I will defend William Acton.

"I did not mind Sarfurt's wrath. He raved and swore and stamped, and then he went off and engaged two lawyers from Herkimer to take his case. I called upon Acton and told him I would defend him, if he would accept my services, as I had accepted his. He took my hand and thanked me.

"I have made a great many pleas in my life, but I think I never made a better one than I made to that jury on that occasion. They were out not over five minutes. By their verdict William Acton was the lawful possessor of the estate his father had left.

"From that day I never hesitated to refuse a case to which I could not give my heart. Such a stand on the part of a lawyer becomes known, and the public feels it; and what the public feels juries are sure to feel.

"Concerning William Acton, I will only add that he became my bosom friend. He always felt that he owed his title to his valuable property to me; and I knew that to him I was indebted for the home that was mine for thirty years. He was very delicate in the gift of that piece of property. He deeded it to my wife. The husband of my oldest daughter is his oldest son."

The Hell-Gate Explosion.

THE work preparatory to the blasting of the rock at Hallett's Point will be brought to a close in about a month. Everything is being put in readiness for the final tremendous explosion, which is to give New York a new doorway to the Atlantic ocean, lessening the time between this city and Europe by twenty-four hours. The last of September has been fixed upon by Gen. Newton, the United States engineer in charge of the work, as the time when the final explosion is to take place.

Many suppose that this rock is in the middle of the stream, but it is a part of, and a projection from, the shore of Long Island, running far out under the water. Being on a point around which the stream makes a land of nearly ninety degrees, it causes the current to set so strongly toward the opposite shore of Ward's Island that a break is inevitable to any vessel which attempts to make the passage when there is not wind enough to carry her through. Persons living near the Point say that two or three vessels a week are often thrown upon "The Gridiron," the opposite rock, and that many of these are so shattered that they are dismantled and sold for old lumber. The removal of the great rocks bar upon the point will give the current another and more direct course and greatly deepen the channel.

The approach to the excavations is along the shore, after leaving the Astoria Ferry, and the visitor comes suddenly upon a deep pit, called a "shaft," only guarded by a few posts and boards nailed across them. Around the mouth of the pit great heaps of stone give evidence of the amount that has been taken out, though much of it has been removed from the place. The whole quantity excavated from the shaft and the tunnels has been over 30,000 cubic yards. This stone is bouldered gneiss, a metamorphic stone of almost the same composition as granite, from which it differs by layers of quartz, mica and feldspar. It generally has a tendency to cleave along the planes where the mica exists in the greatest quantities. The stone is very hard, harder than granite. For this reason and on account of the seams in the rock in some places which admit the water from above into the tunnels, the work has been very difficult. The shaft is thirty-two feet deep and two feet in diameter. On the water some a coffer-dam in the shape of an irregular pentagon, keeps the water out. On the land side of the shaft are the various buildings necessary for carrying on the work. There is an engine-house in which are the great air chambers by means of which the air was compressed until it gave the tremendous number of pounds pressure to the square inch, and was conducted thence in tubes to the Burleigh drills far below in the tunnels. Near these buildings are the quarters' offices, etc.

Ten vast portals, basking like the entrances of great tombs excavated in mountains, open side by side around two-thirds of the circumference of the shaft. They are the entrances to ten large tunnels and to the network of small tunnels which undermine the rock. Within, water comes down in streams

A Democratic Protest.

Overwhelmed by the multitude of evidence which has been produced to show the unfitness of Tilden and Hendricks for the Presidency and Vice Presidency, and unable to find anything objectionable in the records of Hayes or Wheeler, the Democratic papers are raising the pitiful complaint that the Republicans are waging a "campaign of defamation and slander." The accusation is false. The Republican press has simply laid before the people facts in the history of these two candidates, attested by documentary evidence and other proof of the most conclusive character. This course is always legitimate and proper in a Presidential campaign, but there are several considerations which make it especially legitimate at present.

1. The Democrats have challenged inspection into the records of their candidates by putting them forward as the peculiar exponents and representatives of Reform. They were nominated not merely as Democrats, but as Reformers, upon a platform which repeatedly declared that "Reform is necessary" in almost everything in the whole country. Mr. Tilden is reported from a friendly source as saying, on hearing of his nomination: "The people want reform, and, (pointing to himself) they will find it here!" Surely, when candidates are heralded with such a flourish of trumpets as the exemplars of purity, it is not only justifiable but necessary to examine their records and discover upon what their pretensions are based.

2. The Democrats have no right to object to criticism upon their candidates, for their whole stock in trade for the past two years has been the defamation and slander of Republicans. Their House of Representatives has devoted almost its whole attention to partisan investigations for the sole purpose of smutting the characters of Republican leaders and thus manufacturing material for the Presidential campaign. Some of the best and purest men in the country have been attacked and abused by the Democratic organs, and denounced in the same category with Belknap and fellows of his ilk. Now that the process of investigation is being applied to Messrs. Tilden and Hendricks, those same organs are shocked and horrified at the indelicacy of discussing the private affairs of candidates!

3. The attacks upon Mr. Tilden were not begun by Republicans. Democrats have made grave charges against him, and denounced him more bitterly than Republicans have ever done. Protests against his nomination, signed by influential Democrats, and making grave charges against him, were thick as leaves in Vallambrosa at the St. Louis convention. The Western Democratic papers attacked him with the utmost frankness and vigor. Here is a sample of what Democrats thought of Tilden only last June. It is from the Cincinnati Enquirer, the principal Democratic organ of Ohio:

1. He cannot carry his own State in November.

2. He cannot carry any Northern State.

3. He is a hypocrite, a political swindler, has long been a public plunderer, and is really the only disreputable candidate prominently named on the Democratic side.

4. He has sought this high office by methods so unprecedentedly shameless and disreputable that it would be an everlasting stigma upon a Democratic convention to nominate him, and a reproach upon the American people to elect him if nominated.

When Democrats talk like this about their own candidate, Republicans can hardly be blamed for examining and exposing his record.

The real cause of this Democratic outcry about "defamation" is that the main charges against their candidate are true, and that they are falling with crushing force.—Detroit Tribune.

Mr. Bratsey, in his International Review paper on Labor in England, paints a dark picture of the iron trade of England, which is much worse than that of the iron trade of this country, and then adds for the comfort of the English iron-worker that things are infinitely worse with the iron-workers of the European continent. He says, "In Germany there has been over-production." "In Belgium," he says, "more than half the blast furnaces are standing idle," and he remarks, "such a description as this is more discouraging than that given of the trade in England." Will the repeal of the Resumption act and the election of Tilden relight the furnace fires of England, Germany and Belgium? If not, how can they be expected to re-light the furnace fires of the United States?

The list of Republican nominations per Congress in this State has been completed. Of the six Republican members of the present Congress, but two, Messrs. Conger and Hubbard, have been renominated. The other four, Messrs. Wadsworth, Willard, W. B. Williams, and Dudley did not enter into a contest for a renomination, having each served two or more terms. While we shall miss their experience somewhat in the next Congress, we are glad to know that their places are to be taken by men of ability and character. The senior member of the Michigan delegation will be Mr. Conger, who is now serving his fourth term in Congress and who will, without a doubt, be reelected. He is among the ten most influential Republican leaders of the House. Mr. Hubbard has served two terms in Congress, and has shown himself to be strong as a working member, ready and able to look after the interests of his constituents. His re-election is also certain.—Detroit Tribune.

It now looks as though Hayes would make a clean sweep in every Northern State. The harmonious action of the New York Republicans at Saratoga, gives good assurance that Tilden will be beaten in his own State by a decided majority.

Mr. Jewell, Carl Schurz, Attorney General Taft, Senator Morton, and a host of other speakers will take the stump in Ohio and Indiana next week. There ought to be influences enough in a State like that to counteract the efforts of several barrels of money.

In his last letter to New York Herald Mr. Louis J. Jennings says, "The new Conservative leader in the House of Commons will be Sir Stafford Northcote, a man of fair abilities, but a wooden and uninteresting speaker, a lawyer without and lumbering out of a way, of unimposing appearance and awkward manner."

Prince Alexander, of the Netherlands, has been initiated into Freemasonry, in Prince Frederick, the Grand Master of the Order. Prince Frederick recently celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his investiture as Masonic Grand Master for the Netherlands, and was presented by the brethren with a gold hammer set with brilliants.

The marriage at Paris of Count de Ferrant with Mlle Marie Pearson is announced. The bridegroom was a sub-lieutenant of artillery during the last war, and had both his legs carried off at Sedan by a cannon ball. The young people were affianced in their infancy, and the lady insisted upon keeping her word. She is the daughter of a very wealthy ship owner, while her husband has only his cross of the Legion of Honor.

A member of the bar in Franklin county, Mass., called the judge's attention to the fact that Mr. Mowly was holding a revival meeting in the neighborhood, and that it might be advisable to adjourn court, in order to give the attorneys an opportunity to attend. "I would be most happy to adjourn this court," said his honor, blandly, to the petitioning lawyer, "if I thought it would result in your conversion."

The State Board of Equalization, for the purpose of equalizing the valuation, of the several counties, for the next five years, met a few days since and the following is the apportionment of some of the northern counties: Emmet, $500,000; Charlevoix, $450,000; Cheboygan, $1,2000,000; Presque Isle, $750,000; Antrim $600,000; Kalkaska $1,500,000; Otsego $650,000.

The finest yacht on lake Michigan belongs to Mr. Furber, of Menominee, on the Michigan northern peninsula. She is named the Waupun. Her dimensions are eighty feet in length over all and fourteen feet beam, and cost in round numbers $32,000. All her trimming throughout are nickel-plated, her wood work inlaid and her furnishings a combination of beauty and strength. Her table and sideboard are furnished with the most elegant silverware.

Speaking of economy and reform, it is well to remember that over one hundred and fifty million dollars of the annual public expenditures of the Government for pensions, interest, etc., are the direct result of the Democratic rebellion. This sum is annually taken from the pockets of the people. That same Democracy now wants to control the Government, and after inflicting this burden upon the people now asks to come into power on the platform of economy and reform.

Mr. L. P. Walker, ex-rebel Secretary of War, thinks the inauguration of Gov. Tilden at Washington is the only salvation of the country, which, in his opinion, from the 4th of March next, will live or die, according to the event of the Democratic success of Democratic defeat. Many others, with like antecedents, are of his way of thinking, and that is why the people will elect Hayes and Wheeler.

It's on earth but nevertheless true, that not a single vacancy has occurred to date in the Centennial Committee of one or wines.

The total value of the Centennial buildings and their contents is estimated at $10,000,000.

A vigorous famine, while plowing in the soil, turned up what he supposed to be an old iron pot. He struck it with a hoe and immediately disappeared. His wife has the same, but she thinks maybe he has gone to the Centennial Exhibition.

The coffee engine at the Centennial may not be bought by a European firm.

Locomotives are still quite rapacious at some of the Philadelphia hotels. "What is my bill?" anxiously asked a man who had staid over night at one of them, lately. "Your bill?" was the calm reply; "how much money have you got?" "Twenty-nine dollars," gasped the unsuspecting guest. "Well, that's about right," was the unmoved and considerate response. And as the Centennial visitor started out to rest for his home in Indiana, he muttered thoughtfully to himself: "So that is the way that 'tramps' are made." Chicago Journal.

In Germany there are 310,000 acres of land devoted exclusively to the cultivation of hops. The greatest production is attained in Alsace and Lorraine, where 83,000 acres are planted with the vine. Bavaria comes next in the list of grape-growing regions, then Prussia, Wurtemberg, Baden and Hesse each in the order named. The total production in the German Empire exceeds 4 of the new provinces of Alsace and Lorraine, in 1874, was 58,000,000 gallons of wine. About 95 per cent of German wines are used every year in the manufacture of spirituous liquor, and the value of the spirit it yields sold at about its original cost would be $7,500,000. North all the wine-growing districts of Germany are represented at the Centennial exhibition.

It must not be supposed that there is nothing to be seen in the German section but wine and beer. There is a great variety of utensils and implements appropriate to the place and illustrative of the progressive spirit of the German Nation. There is a fine display of smelting coils, patent coils, essence of yeast, bottling fat, machine and sausage grease, pitch of various kinds, cigars smoking tobacco, cigar extract, and tobacco preparations, conserved fruits, bonbons, English and French biscuits, tragacanth goods, black and polished cuttlefish bone, and artificial sea eggs, which also received premiums in Vienna; the finest kind of leather, prepared Morocco leather for pocket-books, portfolios, books and book-binding etc.; and mail seal-skins, which took premiums in Paris in 1867 and at Vienna in 1873; glue made of waste substances, almond paste, vegetables and salads, tine table mustards, essence of tea, alcoholic vinegar, farinaceous spices, extracts, salts, pastel grain, table grits, buckwheat, starch and grape sugar, grape sugar of various grades, molasses, preserves, macaroni, etc. There are also some fine specimens of washed flowers from the bed of German and Prussian rivers, and also from the German, English and French provinces; a machine for cleaning silk worms, perforated sheets of various kinds, machine-belting, paper, cylinder shappers, straw blades, pans, mill glasses with ventilating, high-pressure apparatus; gardening plans, models of apparatus, implements for the cultivation of meadows; articles used in building, and a variety of other articles useful and attractive. These and other productions of German hands and German ingenuity are displayed in excellent shape, the whole making one of the best exhibits in Agricultural Hall. Its location with the southern portion of the building, near the main entrance. Philadelphia Inquirer.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

Sugar has gone up twenty-five per cent.

The last crop of Tennessee is that sixty-five tons of millet have been cut from eighteen acres of land on a farm near Knoxville.

Peach seedlings, heretofore a waste product of the canning factories, are now used in making peach brandy.

All this conclusively proves that the Cherokees are becoming civilized. They can steal as much behind in their land years as Shanneys.

A patent American omnibus company enjoys the monopoly of that trade in Melbourne and suburbs. It possesses eighty thousand car horses.

Connecticut won the championship in American inventive skill last year, having 738 patents, or one to 761 inhabitants. Vermont is at the foot of the class; Massachusetts next to the head.

The Paris Society of Agriculture and horticulture proposes establishing at Mont Sourie a model square, a horticultural collection of all plants likely to be of use in feeding silkworms.

Mr. Louis Dessanges estimates that $5,000,000 worth of tin will be used in London this $10,000 a year will in New York. A family of five or six persons can live very comfortably in London for $30 a week, while the expenses of a similar household in New York would be at least $100 a week.

The pine forests of Nevada are rapidly disappearing before the enormous demands made upon them by the mining industries. It is estimated that the mines on the Comstock lode will consume 200,000 cords of wood this year. It is used in the quartz mills and for other purposes.

The business depression at Boston is driving many professional men into manual labor. Mayor Cobb recently had 800 applicants for two vacancies on the police force, and one of the men appointed is a recent Harvard College and medical school graduate, and a practising physician, whose wife and babe were suffering for food.

There are 2,000 beeweies in the United States. They produce annually 285,000,000 gallons of malt liquors. Many of these have been erected within the last twenty-five years. In 1874 over 2,000,000 bushels of barley was used. There are nearly 400 malt houses in the Union. Beer consumes more than the barley is malted, then ground, then mashed with hot water, a sweet liquor, or "wort," extracted, hops added, the whole boiled, then cooled, then fermented with yeast result—beer, containing 90 to water, 5.4 malt extract, and 3.50 alcohol. Chicago Journal.

A Monster Combination.

The combination of coal companies which was dissolved a few days ago at an angry meeting in New York has had a remarkable history. In 1857 the Philadelphia & Reading Company obtained a new charter as the Reading Coal & Iron Company, to own and work coal mines and lands in Pennsylvania. The Company was authorized to issue certificates of indebtedness to the amount of its business, and transported all the coal offered to it without regard to the regulations of the league. The main purposes as complished by the league during its existence was the prevention of competition. No company was allowed to sell more than a prescribed amount of coal. It also accomplished a possibility of having a permanency in the price, the control of the amount to be sold enabled them to dictate the price at which it was to be sold. To sell coal at that price it was necessary to limit production, and as either one or the four districts could produce as much coal as the annual sales of the combination, we have an explanation of the reason why the mines are only worked at intervals. Throwing the miners out of employment more than half the time, and compelling them, in a lawless manner, to accept the wages offered them by the companies. The anthracite coal companies have not been able to make any serious extortion on the public in the way of prices. There is a point to which the price of anthracite coal may be pushed, but when prices are carried beyond that, the consumption declines, and other coals enter into competition. To this, and not to any unwillingness or moral compunction on the part of the companies, is due the forbearance of the monopoly. The fact, however, remains that the anthracite region of Pennsylvania are capable of producing and sending to market annually at least three times the amount of coal that is sold. This would, of course, materially reduce the price of coal to consumers; but, as the coal-beds and all the means of transportation from the mines are mainly owned and controlled by the same corporations, the amount of coal produced and transported is limited by agreement that there shall be no competition in prices, and the price to consumers is fixed arbitrarily on the first day of each month.

Now the combination is broken by the withdrawal of the two transportation companies which do not own or operate coal mines or lands. All through the mining regions, however, there are individuals who own coal lands who are unable to operate them with profit because they have to depend on the large corporations for the means of transportation. This is especially the case in the Lehigh Valley region. To these the independent road taken by the two transportation companies will be a great advantage. But the power and the wealth of the league are immense, and, though the combination of 1872 has been broken, the common interests of the monopolists will possibly force a reunion of the companies. The league controls the transportation company, refused to be limited in the amount of its business, and transported all the coal offered to it without regard to the regulations of the league. The main purposes accomplished by the league during its existence was the prevention of competition. No company was allowed to sell more than a prescribed amount of coal. POLITICAL NOTES.

☞ It should never be forgotten—It is not forgotten by tax payers—that the entire National debt is the direct result of the Democratic rebellion.—Republican Magazine.

☞ Vernon Brownlow, in his letter to the Tennessee Republicans, says: "In a word, the Democratic party is a sham, a cheat, and a blatant fraud. It is not known in a single profession, and would reverse the plain meaning of indictments were it ones to get into power."

☞ The Democratic Times (Ind.) shows some impatience with the Democrats. It declares there is something too much of this evening out business, and wants to know what need there is of Gen. McClellan coming out for Tilden, putting the question in this way: "If a man who has always been a Democrat, and has been honored with the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, is necessary to assure us that he is going to vote for its nominees, he must think that the party is in a bad way, indeed."

☞ The Democratic papers—prominent among them the Auzeiger des Westens and especially the Missouri Staats-Zeitung—have given the administration a severity rebuke that Carl Schurz supports Hayes and Wheeler merely because a seat in the Cabinet or an Ambassadorship has been offered him. But, on the other hand, the Memphis Post says that, immediately after Tilden's nomination at St. Louis, his friends called on Mr. Pastorius, Mr. Schurz' partner, and requested him to nominate him for Secretary of State, or, if he preferred it, for Ambassador to France. The interesting piece of information proves that Tilden and his friends, as genuine Tammany Democrats, fully understand the art of political bargaining, but that Carl Schurz is of the same opinion as ever, to the support of a "cracked Reformer" like Tilden by an offer of personal profit.—Penn Yan.

☞ Samuel J. Tilden has been proved a perjurer. This is not a campaign story, but a well meaning man, without reflection, on insufficient data in the heat of partisan debate, it is a hard, remorseless fact. Tilden himself is the accuser of Tilden, and he fully established the fact of political bargaining, but that Carl Schurz is for the man to be sworn over to the support of a "cracked Reformer" like Tilden by an offer of personal profit.—Penn Yan.

Tilden a Self-convicted Perjurer.

The income tax was passed fifteen years ago and was repealed in 1872. The close of 1863 Gen Tilden made a sworn statement of his income during 1862. He set down the total amount at $1,043,700 from which he made such reductions as the law allows, leaving his taxable income $7,118. No doubt the Assessor, if he knew the man, suspected his statement to be false; perjury, but he could hardly have substantiated the charge, and, as a matter of course, made no complaint. But a few days ago, in more forgetfulness, probably, than in the former statement, Mr. Tilden made a deposition in which he specified his income during the same year, 1862, which amounted to $20,000. It is certain, therefore, that he swore to a lie in one or the two statements.

A Singular Reunion.

There is no use to give names. This would only sour somebody's temper and gratify the curiosity of those who have no right to know anything about the fine points in the case. Mrs. R. was the daughter of a well-to-do Southern gentleman before the war. The daughter was, at the time to which reference is made, something of a belle in her circle, and was very generally known. She resigned for some time, and was at last married. She and her husband moved to New Orleans, where they set me to keep house and to be happy. That they kept house is known; that they were happy is not known. They may have been at first, but there grew upon estrangement between them, and harsh and bitter words followed. The husband became disgusted, and finding that there was not all that bliss in marriage which he had expected to find, told his wife goodbye, and left her and his home in the Crescent City.

The separation occurred fourteen years ago, and he has never returned to the present day. When he had been gone eight or nine years, and she was offered an opportunity to become mistress of a plantation in the interior of Mississippi, she accepted it and again became a wife, having easily procured a divorce from her absent husband. She lived with the second husband three years, when he died, and she has been living in the South for the past two or three years, a double widow. Not many months ago she received a letter from her original husband, telling her that he had come to Colorado, and, saying that if she wanted to live with him she could have that exalted privilege by packing up and coming to the Centennial state. Only too glad to accept the proposition, she lost no more time than could be avoided, and starting westward, reached Denver a few days since. The "long lost," it may be well to say, does not live in Denver, but some distance in the country. He had at first instructed her to come there to his home, but for some reason changed his mind in this regard, and when the train arrived in this city, a colored messenger met the lady at the depot, and said: "De man says you is to stop at the —— Hotel." She went to the hotel designated and registered. During the afternoon her husband joined her. Fatal that is known to the contrary the meeting was a cordial one. Afterward, when seen together, the parties looked as placid and pleased as if no wave of trouble had ever rolled between them. Both of them had, of course, changed considerably in appearance since the last separation. It is possible, too, that they learned a lesson from their experience which may prove a stronger tie than minister's ceremony or clerk's certificate. They have recently left the city, and it is supposed have gone to the husband's new home. May they live long and prosper.—Denver Tribune.

The little social manœuvrers must select called the "white mul," which, occurs so abundantly in the tropics and in the United States as far north as Boston and vicinity, has been found by Dr. Hagen to be more destructive than commonly supposed. It has been found, in Salem and Cambridge, to undermine houses, grapevine, and to injure fine pine and lemon. Some of the State papers in Springfield, Ill., were destroyed by them, as well as the Santiago school library in South Carolina. Dr. Hagen, in an interesting account of this insect in the American Naturalist for July, advises the removal of old stumps, fences, and pieces of boards and rotten wood. Such preventive measures as these may serve to check the spread of this insect.

The Michigan & Ohio Plaster Company, of Grand Rapids, has been ordered to be discontinued and wound up by the Supreme Court. The Exhibits is an old log hut, in Gun Spring, which is on the main road leading from Searcy to Little Rock.

During the last few days the Exhibits has been attracted by strange noises, and, this fact being conveyed to the citizens of Searcy, they determined to investigate the matter. In company with Mr. T. D. Humphreys, of Searcy, and a Mr. Blake, from El Paso, in this county, determined to visit Gum Spring and see what was going on. The strange noises were heard as they reached the locality. During the past the but they were arrested by Mr. Dozier, who claimed to be one of God's people. Mr. Humphreys proposed that they should turn back and see what was wanted. They did so, and were invited into the hut, Dozier asserting that God was in there he wanted to see him. As soon as they stepped from the wagon Dozier, Humphreys was seized by four men and Blake by four women. The latter succeeded in breaking away, but the former was unable to do so, and he ran about 100 yards, and, on looking back, saw the men cutting his companion to pieces with long knives. He at once started for town, but his buggy was upset and demolished. He then mounted his horse, rode to Searcy at a breakneck speed, and reported the terrible occurrence to the citizens. A force was at once raised, and proceeded to the rescue. On arriving at the spring a fearful sight met their gaze. The Cobbites had decapitated Humphreys and set stock the head on a paling. A boy who was riding he was compelled to get off his horse and bow to the head three times. He was also made to pray, and then told to hurry away, or the bowels of the earth would open and swallow him. When the posse arrived, had stopped on a human skull, partly hid among the grass. It was quite dry and hard, and might, to all appearances, have been there for two or three years, so well had the dogs done their work. A few steps further there was another, and beside it a part of a skeleton, likewise white and dry. As we soon ascertained, bones, skeletons and skulls became more frequent, but here they had not been picked so clean, for there were fragments of half-dry, half-putrid flesh still clinging to them.

"At last we came to a kind of little plateau or shelf on the hillside, where the ground was nearly level, with the exception of a little indentation where the head of a hollow broke through. We rode toward this with the intention of crossing it, but all suddenly drew rein with an exclamation of horror, for right before us, almost beneath our horses' feet, was a sight that made us shudder. It was a heap of skulls, intermingled with bones from all parts of the human body, skeletons nearly entire rotting, clothing, human hair and putrid flesh lying there in one foul heap, around which the grass was growing luxuriantly. It emitted a sickening odor, like that of a dead horse, and it was here that the dogs had been seeking a tasty repast when our untimely approach interrupted them.

"In the midst of this heap I could distinguish one slight skeleton form still enclosed in a chemise, the skull wrapped about with a colored handkerchief, and the bare ankles encased in the cut-robbed footless stockings worn by the Bulgarian girls. We looked about us. The ground was strewed with bones in every direction, save the dogs had carried them off to gnaw them at their leisure. At the distance of not yards beneath us lay the town. As seen from our standpoint, it reminded one somewhat of the ruins of Herculaneum or Pompeii. There was not a roof left, not a whole wall standing; all was a mass of ruins, from which arose as we listened a low plaintive wail like the 'keening' of the Irish over their dead, that filled the little valley and gave it voice.

"We looked again at the heap of skulls and skeletons before us, and we observed that they were all small, and that the articles of clothing intermingled with them and lying about were all parts of women's apparel. These, we all knew, were the girls. Five of us counted about 100 skulls.

"We then turned our horses' heads, and including those that were hidden beneath the others in the ghastly heap, nor those that were scattered far and near through the fields. The skulls were nearly all separated from the rest of the bones, the skeletons were rarely all together. These women had all been beheaded."

Fanaticism and Crime.

The subjoined are the sickening details of one of the strangest and most extraordinary tragedies ever enacted in the history of the world. Before referring to the matter, a few extracts having a bearing on its subject may be necessary. "In the midst of this heap I could distinguish one slight skeleton form still enclosed in a chemise, the skull wrapped about with a colored handkerchief, and the bare ankles encased in the cut-robbed footless stockings worn by the Bulgarian girls. We looked about us. The ground was strewed with bones in every direction, save the dogs had carried them off to gnaw them at their leisure. At the distance of not yards beneath us lay the town. As seen from our standpoint, it reminded one somewhat of the ruins of Herculaneum or Pompeii. There was not a roof left, not a whole wall standing; all was a mass of ruins, from which arose as we listened a low plaintive wail like the 'keening' of the Irish over their dead, that filled the little valley and gave it voice.

"We looked again at the heap of skulls and skeletons before us, and we observed that they were all small, and that the articles of clothing intermingled with them and lying about were all parts of women's apparel. These, we all knew, were the girls. Five of us counted about 100 skulls.

"We then turned our horses' heads, including those that were hidden beneath the others in the ghastly heap, nor those that were scattered far and near through the fields. The skulls were nearly all separated from the rest of the bones, the skeletons were rarely all together. These women had all been beheaded."

JEN AND JOE

Jean wife, it don't seem long ago
Since you were Jen and I was Joe,
And we sang songs thought we back
To when we started down life's track,
I suppose I am young to say
One should feel darkened any way,
But that we have escaped to flight
Its hideous scourge from our sight
And so I thought, while sitting here,
Of those old days to us so dear,
And how beneath the moon's pale glow
Your lips first dared to whisper low,
Ah, wife, how happy I was then
As I repined and called you Jen,
And that was fifty years ago,
And you were then as I was Joe.

You, wife, full fifty years have gone
Since life was full of dreams and song,
Without a thought or sin or fear,
But that we'd have through eating years,
And though we've grown of age since,
We guessed much better than someone,
You still send love all through our life,
And so we have, my precious wife.

But time as alters everything
That thrilling scene can old days bring;
And when I see sitting there by me
Living them up in sweet review,
And I suppose you feel with me
While the staid thing by me and we,
We're not forgot the years ago
When you were Jen and I was Joe.

THE BOOKKEEPER'S ROBBER.

Scattered through all the mining countries of California, perched upon the sides of mountains, or hidden in deep gulches, are the quartz mills, by means of which gold is extracted from the worthless rock that contines it. There are hundreds upon hundreds of them all over the State, some in active operation, the superintendent and the settled. You can easily tell when one is being worked. The roar of the pounding stamps may be heard at a great distance, and in the mills themselves you can hardly hear your own voice.

One day every week or ten days the mill is stopped. This is done for the purpose of "cleaning up," as it is called, that is, of gathering from the batteries and sluices, from the pans and amalgamators, the amalgam from which, after being retorted, there results the bright gold bullion so obtained. Every one living in the immediate neighborhood of a mill knows when it is cleaning-up day. The silence proclaims it, and even if one would, such could be no method of concealing it.

A few years ago I was employed in a mine in Nevada County as bookkeeper. I was then a youngster of seventeen. I had taken a voyage to San Francisco before the mast, under the mistaken idea that I was born a sailor. Now I was working my way ashore I would never go to sea again. But that's another story.

The fall and winter of that year will long be remembered in that country. Light - fingered gentry, commonly known as footpads, were more than usually busy in the mining districts. The treasure-boxes were rifled. Passengers were relieved of their purses, watches and jewelry. Two cripples, who, kept in a wagon, were found murdered, their safe opened and money gone. Travelers were stopped on the road, and quiet pedestrians, returning to their cabins at night, were called upon to stand and deliver.

No wonder, then, that people hesitated about traveling after sundown, especially if they had anything of value on their persons.

It was late in the month of October. The mills had been running for two weeks, night and day, on a higher grade of rock than usual. On Sunday, as the superintendent left the office, he gave orders that the mill should be stopped before daylight, and the work of cleaning up be begun at once, so that it might be finished if possible before dark.

Accordingly, as soon as the first rays of light showed in the morning, the engine of the mill was busy at the furnace, exerting the amalgam that had accumulated during the week from the coppers before the batteries. Work as fast as they could, it was after five before it was ready for the great retort.

When we had seen the retort put into the furnace, the superintendent called me into the office and said:

"I've got to go to town now to attend to some business, but that bullion must come in to-night to go down on honeycomb stage, and you must bring it. Which of you will go?"

Two of the men, Dutch Bill and Jack Bates, who were killed were Leonard H. Dover and Thos. Gainey, his son-in-law. Mrs. Nancy Gaines and two girls were released, the testimony not going to implicate them further than that they were present after the arrest and while being taken to Searcy they kept up their mournful howls. Dozier, Humphreys and Blake are now committed to jail. Quite a number of converts who had espoused the beastly doctrine of Cobb, but who were not directly implicated in the killing, have left the country, fearful of the excited populace, who threaten all Cobbites with extermination. Those who are in jail have grown quiet, but refuse to talk, and still adhering of their religion and its rites. They are all gaunt, half-starved, crazed creatures. It is said they had scarcely tasted food for days prior to the terrible scenes of Tuesday night, being engaged in preparing themselves for the end of the world.

—Telegraph wires and insulators are now prepared in England with more care, it is claimed, than in any other country, and consequently last longer. It would appear that "best" wire is not considered by the English manufacturers good enough for telegraph purposes—no thing, it seems, to distinguish the two still higher qualities of "best, best, best," and "extra best, best," of soft iron wire. As to insulators, the material from which most of those now employed on the various English lines are made—the various English lines are made—the various English lines are made—

A Common Folly.

It is somewhat wise forethought not to cross an unbridged stream before they are called to either words, and to count your chickens before they are hatched, which may never happen—why not the opposite rule, and be sorry about the evils that may befall us or our friends, hopefully as possible? There are many of us, no doubt, who like the sunshine and pasture of our lives by living in a constant dread or expectation of some dire misfortune, inconceivable or multitudinous, that will surely overtake us, and still cannot give a reason for our fears. Some of the imaginary evils that we anticipate is much difference, except that in the one case we suffer in advance the misery we are accumulating largely, and in the other we have to endure it only when it comes. It is doubtless an inherent error, or the result of a careless or ungrateful temperament, but it is one of the less unfortunate and a source only of a forthright that on would do well to sell for a mess of pottage. The worrier is constantly on a mental rushing however, and always ready to shout at the first sign of danger, she does not expect to be prepared, but money is invested in Government bonds, the Government is always secure to repudiate. If we may draw moral from the fable of the ant and the grasshopper, the smells smoke at the head of the original," and views but fortunate long as it it were the fortunate ones. Nothing is too great or small for her to drive herself about. If her son is in college, perhaps he will be expelled shortly, if he pulls in the next crew, the men break it, if he is dressed in the silk mill they have wholesome worked into the glove texture; perhaps she could have bought her gloves more cheaply at Stake's, or having purchased them there would they not have worn better had they come from Cronin's She's certain that Mrs Smurrugrewed returns all the scarves she gives her, then no husband will fill this year, since he escaped last year; that if the daughters are going to break in another winter, they will make her house their rendezvous, though she knows she has nothing worth stealing." If her own mother-in-law is not cared over her engagement, perhaps she is fond of her sister-in-law, and anticipates the introduction into the family circle of some one in no college connex, teach it at our friendes.

Time is thought for the morrow," says the Divine Teacher, and in refusing to obey His precepts we learn the futility of our own short-sighted folly.

An Usher Farmer's Experience.

A GENTLEMAN who lives up the railroad, having been pestered by his relations from the city coming to visit him every summer, told his wife last spring that there must be a change in things. If she had to work herself half foddered during the hot weather she might as well get paid for it, so he meant to advertise for boarders. The good wife approved, and the result is they have filled their house with boarders at seven dollars a week, and the best of relatives have to go somewhere else to spend the summer and pay for their board. Well," said the gentleman, to my wife don't have to work half so hard. These boarders are not near as particular about having vestly food as our relatives, and they actually help around the house just as though it was fun for them. Catch any of our company doing that. Not a bit of it. There were always in the way, wanting continual waiting on, and never did a thing to help my wife, not even in washing dishes. We will make, this summer, nearly $600, and it will be clear money, for our relations would have eaten just as much as these boarders, besides making more work, without ever contributing a cent.—*Xenia (O.) Instructions to United States Marshals.

The following are the instructions from the Attorney-General to United States Marshals regarding the coming elections. A copy will be sent to each United States Marshal through out the country:

Sir: The issue of the ballot States being settled, it only remains to exercise general diligence in the discharge of the duties of the office. I have prepared for the use of the marshals a set of instructions in relation to coming elections, including the questions as a reply once for all, to the many inquiries which are constantly coming from various sources. In the interest of the Government I call your attention particularly to the following points: Nothing is to be gained or lost by any attempt on the part of the Government to interfere with the conduct of elections, except to the extent that it is necessary to prevent violence and to see that the laws are executed. Violence is to be suppressed by the United States authorities only when it is of such character and extent as to render it impossible for the State authorities to suppress it, or when it is threatened against the United States officers in the discharge of their duties, and the State authorities are unable to protect them. Violence is to be suppressed

A Faithful Dog.

THE faithfulness and affection of the Newfoundland dog was very touchingly illustrated in the case of the drowned mate of the schooner Arctic. He, James Mitchell, of whose death nothing was known until his body was found adrift in the river below Buffalo street bridge, Capt. Harper, of the Arcturus, owns a noble specimen of this breed of the canine race, and the deceased had petted the animal until it had acquired a deep and lasting affection for him. When Mitchell left the vessel, the dog followed him, much to the annoyance of the captain, who threatened to have the mate arrested for spiriting away the animal. As the vessel was about to leave port and the dog had not been returned, Capt. Cheyne and the first mate set out to look him up and take him aboard. The mate was surprised to find him alone, stretched out upon the dock at the foot of Chicago street, with his paws and nose over the edge. The animal, on recognizing the captain, jumped about him and howled, and then resumed his place, as if intent on watching something in the water. Capt. Cheyne then reached the spot and compelled the dog to accompany him to the vessel. It never occurred to the seaman that Mitchell had walked off the dock at that point, and that the dog had endeavored to acquaint them with the fact, until they received the intelligence of the discovery of the body of the unfortunate seaman. The virgils of the faithful dog last succeeded nearly ten hours, and during the time the animal had watched and fasted.

—The lightning-rod men have been making a sweep through the western part of Rhode Island, says the Providence Journal, and many hundred farmers in Foster and vicinity are in considerable trepidation now that they discover the trap that has been laid for them. At one farm, owned by a lady advanced of seventy years of age, the gilt-tongued lightning-rod man proposed to put up the rods for an insignificant sum, as he desired to have them in a sightly place for an advertisement. After the order was signed and the work done, a bill came in for over $100, the rods being charged at about three times the price per foot asked by respectable dealers, and the sum total for some of the buildings exceeding the value of the buildings themselves.

What Brick Pomeroy Says.

Pomeroy has for years been acknowledged as one of the ablest exponents of Democracy, and this is what he says of Tilden, speaking from personal knowledge:

At this time, 1868, we were a resident of New York, editing a daily paper there. Stumping the State for Democrats and in country towns denouncing Republicans for doing what Democrats did at the close of the campaign! We were under orders to speak. We did speak, and when the election was over, and we come to know the trick and to see the orders and documents, printed in the name of bogery against each forgery of returns. From that hour of indignant protest to Tweed and Sweeny in prison dated the tearing-not process which ended in our bankruptcy in that city, in a field that was fat and fair for every man who would be a thief, and who would denounce Republicans for their fraudulent voting during the war then emulate the example in time of peace Tweed and Tilden both said that the end justified the means. And this is the record of Democratic reform in the city of New York. It is all right to reform but for Heaven's sake do not persist that Paul was never sad, or that a man of brain power who has for years corkscrewed himself into every jug of profit has always been a pure pattern of perfection. Truth is far better than falsehood. It is easier to tell and much harder to be driven from. There is no sense in successfully deceiving the people, or expecting seed sown in corruption to bring forth good fruit. Mr Tilden is not a statesman, like Hendricks or Thurman, or Gov Church, or Seymour. But he is more than average politician of the order of Tweed, and ought to know that subterfuge is not half so popular with the people as is the blunt truth.

Another thing in this connection. When the old Tammany Ring broke up, Senator Harry Genet was arrested for frauds and enormous robberies of the people. He was given into the charge of Sheriff Brennan, who placed Genet in the custody of a Deputy Sheriff, who accompanied Genet, his prisoner, to his home, where he could see his wife. Genet slipped away, and fled the country. Gov. Dix ordered Sheriff Brennan under arrest. He was tried for neglect of duty, fined $1,000 and sent to prison. New York city was full of Democrats who said that Dix did right to punish a Sheriff who had no business to take any chance or to allow a millionaire robber any more privileges than he would a poor man arrested for stealing a watch or a loaf of bread.

When Tweed was a prisoner, Sheriff Connor, a friend of Tweed, placed him in custody of a Deputy Sheriff. He took Tweed out to the park day after day, as Tilden personally knew. He took Tweed home to see his wife, and he slipped away as Genet had done before. Did Tilden order the arrest of Sheriff Brennan? Did he apply the same law that existed and was rightfully applied to Brennan? Did he do that which the law says is his duty? No. He never even reprimanded Sheriff Connor. Never disturbed him. Why? Because Sheriff Connor defied him and said:

"Gentlemen, arrest, fine or imprison me if you dare, and I will prevent with a balance of power in my hands in this city your receiving the delegation from this city that you demand shall be sent to the National Convention in your favor. Touch me if you dare!"

Governor Dix shot his guilty man on the spot. Tilden stood between Sheriff Connor and the law, and was paid his price for defending an officer who had done what the same law, when ordered applied by Dix, had done for Brennan!

This is one of the many reasons why such men as Charles O'Conor, Peter Cooper, Sanford E. Church, Horatio Seymour and others of the best and purest Democrats of New York said before the nomination at St. Louis that Tilden was not a reformer, not fit to administer executive power, for he never dared to strike a man who had strength, or to apply a law to a man who had friends who might stand in the way of his political ambitions.

Elect Tilden, such a reformer and the country gains nothing in its moral tone. He has spent his force to secure his nomination, but he never will be President. Every vote cast for him is a vote thrown away from Democracy and reform.

Reason why Hayes Should be Elected.

Rutherford B. Hayes is a true man in every respect.

His past record is without stain.

He proffered his services to the Government in the hour of need.

He was a brave soldier, and shed his blood in defense of his country.

He has never betrayed a trust nor a friend.

He has never wronged a person out of a dollar which was due him, or failed to keep his promise to the humblest.

He has made a good Governor during three terms and has kept himself clear of all jobs. His hands are as clean to-day as when he entered upon his duties as Governor of Ohio.

He is in favor of keeping faith with the Nation's creditors, and redeeming every pledge made in time of war or peace.

He is in favor of free schools and the maintenance of the system free from all sectarian influences.

He is earnestly in favor of the highest possible purity in the civil service, and would surround himself, if elected, with men of recognized ability and integrity.

His past record as a man, as an official, as a soldier, is the best proof of his eminent fitness for the high office of President.

He belongs to the army of loyal men who love the Union and who have given evidence of their devotion to its highest interests.

His election would secure a sound currency, protect and improve the public credit, advance throughout the world the National honor, and restore to the people prosperity in all the great centers of trade and commerce.

Rutherford B Hayes is a model husband, father, and friend, qualities which honor the man, and would honor the highest offices within the gift of the people.

Can any one doubt the superior forces of such a man for Presidency? Can there be a possible risk in calling him to rule over the Republic? Is he not just the man that is needed to shape the destinies of the next four years? Study his character, examine his record, weigh him in all those qualities which go to make up the citizen and the statesman and he will come out of he examination the same noble man. With such a leader the Republican party must win; with such a President the Nation could not help advance in the path of material progress.

Evils of Gossips.

I have known a country society which withered away all to nothing under the dry root of gossip. Friendships once as firm as granite dissolved to jelly, and then ran away to water, only because of this; love, that promised a future as enduring as Heaven and as stable as Truth evaporated into a morning mist, that turned to a day's long tears, only because of this; a father and son were set foot to foot with the fiery breath of an anger that would never cool again between them; and a husban and his wife, each straining at the heated lash which, in the beginning, had been the golden bandage of a God-blessed love, sat mournfully by the grave where all their love and all their joy lay buried, and all because of this. I have seen faith transformed to mean doubt, joy give place to grim despair, and charity take on itself the features of black malevolence, all because of the small words of scandal, and the magic mutterings of gossip. Great crimes work great wrongs, and deeper tragedies of human life spring from the large passions; but woful and most mournful are the unexaggerated tragedies that issue from gossip and detraction; most mournful the shipwreck often made of noble natures and lively lives by the bitter winds and dead salt waters of slander. So easy to say, yet so hard to disprove—throwing on the innocent all the burden and the strain of demonstrating their innocence, and punishing them as guilty if unable to to pluck out the stings they cannot see, and to silence words they never hear—gossip and slander are the deadliest and cruelest weapons men has ever forged for his brother's heart.—Exchange.

One of the most incomprehensible sights of the present campaign is that of softmoney Republicans volunteering their aid to put Democrats into the House of Representatives at Washington, under the hallucination that if they succeed they will be able to waggle the Confederate party in Congress as a caudal appendage.

Sympathy is that quality of the human heart that gives a kindly bias to men's actions. Without it this world would be poor indeed, and human nature would be destitute of one of its most beautiful attributes. Remove sympathy from the human breast, and there is a vacuum created only to be exceeded in size by that product by the removal of a "Light-Running Domestic" from the midst of a family where it has been for years. Get a Domestic."

A Fearful Ride.

I was a gentleman who came in from Spring Hill, Kan., yesterday and in a case we obtained the particulars, as we give them below, of a fearful ride which was taken by a party of ten on the evening of Sunday last, in the vicinity of Spring Hill, which will, we suppose, result in the death of a fine and beautiful lady, resident of Olathe. The party referred to had been attending the camp-meeting which was in progress at Spring Hill for some days, and delayed the return home until night came on, when they started from the grounds in their wagons. The horses were heavily hung with threatening limbs closely, which were over and over lapped up with the hind plane of the wagons. The negro who was driving the team had become somewhat confused in the dim light, portending a storm.

Nothing daunted by the threatening aspect of the weather, the party, consisting of ten persons, started from the grounds and drove rapidly through the almost impenetrable darkness toward their home, keeping the road by the lightning's bright flash. But the storm coming over the road, when the thunder rolled in deep tones, as if announcing the knell of doom, and the heavens opening the house of clouds and letting down the floods of rain, and not a great ways from Spring Hill, the driver missed his bearings and drove over a precipitous bank, upsetting the wagon and its load of humanity, with the horses, was sent whirling down, down, a distance of 150 feet, with a terrible crash. The scene is terrible, our informant says, to contemplate, and he cannot, with pen, depict it as it really was. The wagon was broken into many pieces, and the horses were killed. It is said that the wagon turned in the air before reaching the base of the precipice.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

Strange Suicide of Two Girls.

A small town of Wilmington, Del., excited over an events suicide who committed the act on Thursday, the 12th inst. The circumstances are as follows: Rosa Green, fourteen years of age, and only daughter of Thomas Green, a farmer residing in Wilmington, near the Mansfield line, and a Miss Shurtleff, seventeen years of age, daughter of Isaac Shurtleff of Delaware, in Wilmington, who was visiting at Mr. Green's, took strychnine together about eleven o'clock. Thursday morning with the intention of committing suicide. After they had taken the poison they told what they had done to a companion, who communicated the fact to Dr. Green, who was attending a case in Holland, and also the physician. Dr. Richardson of Mansfield was the first physician to arrive, and he gave them emetics, but only succeeded in causing Miss Shurtleff to vomit. Miss Green died about three o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Green arrived about half an hour before she died, and in answer to his questions as to her motive in taking poison, the dying girl said that no one cared for her, that she wanted to go and see her mother, who died a year and a half ago; that her mother was calling her, and she was tired of life. This was all the explanation that could be obtained. She was buried on Friday. Miss Shurtleff was asked to her home in Daleville, and coming in a precarious condition. She makes no further explanation of the affair.

Two young men were in the room when the girls took the dose, and they managed to leave them partake, telling them what it was, etc., but the young man declined, although they supposed the girls were taking about the poison. They prepared the strychnine by mixing it with water and essence of wintergreen. The strychnine was a part of a bottle which was left in the house by a former tenant; but Mr. Green had told Rosa that it was a deadly poison, and had placed it where no one could get hold of it, except by design. The day before, Rosa told her father that she was going to take some of it, but, supposing she was joking, he paid no attention to it. It shows, however, that the shocking affair was premeditated, and had been fully discussed and planned by the two girls. It is a very singular case, and all particulars concerned are extremely reticent about it.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

The Other Side of the Hill.

Two old men, one of them the Duke of Wellington, were once riding in a carriage across country, in England. They were each more than eighty years of age, and they enlivened their journey by an expedient that might almost appeal to savor of second childhood—guessing what would be found on the other side of each hill which they had occasion to ascend. The guesses of the Duke were so often incorrect that the companion expressed surprise.

"My friend," was the reply, "I have spent my whole life in guessing what is on the other side of the hills. And, little later, as the two friends were relating the incident, in a pleasant way, to a lady, she made some remark which led the Duke to observe: "Madam, the days of a General in war, the plans of a battle or a campaign, is neither more nor less than simply guessing what is on the other side of the hill."

It was a somewhat humorous, but very handy a very forcible way of illustrating at once a familiar fact with its familiar lesson. Many of us may remember a reading exercise in a school-book some twenty years ago, entitled "The Journey of a Day, the Picture of Human Life." The comparison is, in many ways, apt and forcible, yet in none is there more than in this, that to life, as in a journey, there is always "the other side of the hill." As a hill difficulty, there is another side to it; as an obstacle to the view seems to loom of the road before us, it becomes, when surmounted no longer a hindrance but an outlook; we approach it in the shadow, perhaps, yet beyond there is the glorious sunlight—running, dells, and streams, and distant city spires, all aglow in the brightness.

What a beautiful element in our nature is this principle of hope, manifested in ages, that, however the side toward us may be forbidding or disheartening, there is another side to which we shall come by-and-bye, surmounting the hill, often, we do not avail will be the wisdom of to-morrow, if the faith of to-day has already ruined us?—Chicago Standard.

POLITICAL NOTES.

☞ The Republicans of Virginia insist that the State can be carried for Hayes and Wheeler, and they propose to make the effort

☞ The Democrats lose twenty-eight members of the Legislature in Vermont. And yet the Democratic organs figure out a Democratic gain.

☞ The Republican majority in Maine was 12,885 in 1873, 11,497 in 1874, and 4,775 in 1875. Add the returns for 1876, and where are those crumbs of comfort for the Democrats?

☞ The Republican majority on the Congressional ticket in Vermont is 27,000, a gain on the vote of 1874 of 16,353. This gain is repeated Democratic muthemselves.—Inter Ocean.

☞ This is the way in which the Philadelphia Times announces the result of the election in Wilmington, Del.: "Will Cummings, the little metropolis of little Delaware, amused herself yesterday with a political landslide from Democracy to Republicanism, and changed the popular vote enough to whirl the county should it have the gift of continuance in November.

☞ A correspondent of the New York Times recalls this reminiscence of the war: "In 1864, just after the battles of the Wilderness, a party of gentlemen were assembled in a room at Willard's, and in the course of an animated conversation one of them used the following language: 'Gentlemen, the next Administration of Mr. Lincoln. He who gave utterance to this patriotic remark was Samuel J. Tilden."

☞ A Chicago telegram of the 12th says: The New York Sun having stated that the Hon. Carl Schurz, in writing to a friend in Washington, had said that in Ohio the German vote was arrayed against the Republicans, and that he had doubts whether Hayes would carry the State, a friend of the ex-senator telegraphed him today, about the Sun story, asking for the facts and the privilege of making the reply public. The following was Mr. Schurz' answer:

MADISON, Ind., Sept. 12.

I wrote no such letter, and entertain no such opinion. Ohio seems to me sure for Hayes. Use this as you please.

C. SCHURZ.

☞ The Maine elections were held yesterday. The results are of a most gratifying character. In every district, in every county, there were Republican gains, and, taking the State over, these gains were greater than in 1872. The Republicans made a clean sweep yesterday. The entire State ticket was elected, and from every Congressional, Senatorial and Legislative District the Republican candidates were returned. That Maine will be a Republican State may possess no more significance than the fact that it has always been so, but the fact that the Democrats have been returned to power in Ohio, in spite of the fact that the Democratic majority in the last previous election of from 8,000 to 10,000. Yesterday Maine voted and gave about the same rate of Republican success. Weakening, is it?—Chicago Journal.

☞ In ten years the screw has entirely replaced the paddle in transatlantic navigation, the weight of machine engines has diminished one-half, the steam pressure has quadrupled, and the consumption of coal has decreased two-thirds.

NASBY.

Mr. Nasby Considers It Necessary to Instruct the People of the North as to the True State of the Case with Respect to the Negro.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

CONFEDERATE X ROADS, }
WHICH IS IN THE STATE OF KENTUCKY. }

Brethren Northern mosquiters for some weeks past, I hev complied the impression that the people av the North don't understand the true status av things down here; and I feel it my dooty to enlitten em. It is not indeed that a Northern man kin not understand the feelins av a subserver. The Northerner never was a arissocrat like us—he never was a sooperior race, but born more liberal-minded, or more open to reason, or such, they kin hardly be expected to comprehend how some things strike our minds av long standin. Sum things which hev been odiferced to sheem to force

That the nigger kin fruddle to us there ain't no question, and nobuddy denies it. He is a worriment and an infliction, and more than that he has abolished nocrat, and there never kin be peace in our land so long as he continues to exist.

We are in constant fear on him. Like in the Cornels there is about 200 in em—there was more, but their repeated assumpshuns av late hev caused them to thinned out somewhat—and them 200 keep us in constant fear. They form a body by themselves, and hev doubtless organized to act upon us. I myself see em, and kin count em on my fingers, and they hev their own religious meetins, which is doubtliss a kiver for their nefarious designs.

We hev never suffered from any outbreaks by them, for the Cornels is prompt. Whenever we antisepate danger, and foot a risin, we immasdiately sally out and kill a dozen or so, with sure to quell the insurrekshun.

They will not labor for us, and this stand in the way av the progress av the country. This season the folkrin losses occurred amung the other side of the hill till we have reached it. "A pendent man," says the inspirred oracle, "forseeth the evil and hideth himself; but the simple pass on and are punished." "He wise to-day," says another good counsellor. Of what avail will be the wisdom of to-morrow, if the folly of to-day has already ruined us? Chicago Standard.

☞ Now, honestly, does it look as if the Republican party was weakening, as the bogus "reformers" under Tilden would have people believe? Vermont cast two weeks ago, and the result was an increase of the Republican majorities of the last previous election of from 8,000 to 10,000. Yesterday Maine voted and gave about the same rate of Republican success. Weakening, is it?—Chicago Journal.

Hayes and Tilden—A Comparison.

The publication of slanderous charges against Gov. Hayes in relation to his tax returns has served one good purpose. It enables the people to contrast the conduct of the opposing candidates for the Presidency. Tilden was charged with perjury in this, that in 1863 he made a false return of his income for the year 1862, and made oath to the truth of the statement. Those are the facts. On the 26th of December, 1863, Tilden swore that his income from all sources for the year 1862 was $7,118. Since his nomination he has been compelled to answer to the charge of embezzlement as trustee at the suit of the Alton, Terre Haute & St. Louis Railway Company. In his answer he swears that he received from the company as fees in the year 1862, $20,000, thus unwittingly confessing himself guilty of the crime of perjury in 1863. What is his explanation? This, and nothing more, from his printed statement, namely, that the railway fee was earned by a service covering a period of four or five years, and that, although only a portion of it was included in the income return for 1862, the charge against him is negatived by the sworn statement of Tilden, which appears in the same report, that he did not check the service for which he received a fee of $20,000 in the year 1861. And this is all of Til den's explanation in regard to the charge of perjury. Let us turn to Gov. Hayes' record. Charges were made against his integrity by the terrible pitch of its candor, made the charge that Gov. Hayes had not paid taxes in 1875, and 1876, falsified his returns of property subject to taxation, and thus violated the laws of the State of Ohio. The facts indicated did not bear out the charge as preferred, but the charge was made in such a way as fully and frankly by an exhibit showing conditions. In that way he put it out of the power of any partisan to misrepresent his property and escaped taxation in that any part of it had been under valued, all of it had been duly listed and a portion of it had been overlisted. This exhibit is commended by the sworn affidavits of parties familiar with all the facts. The difference between Gov. Hayes, especially in the matter of taxes, is manifest. One man was seen to go home for two days, but slept on the floor at Brooms's

The Tilden interest now insists on voting and taking part in public affairs. At meetings called to ratify the nominations of Democrats and other purposes, they come in and vote and speak, just as the they were citizens, and have been in the habit of doing so

From telegrams of the 21st say there were over 17,000 Russians in the Servian army, and that the Porte had refused to continue negotiations for peace until the Indian ceased.

The Atrocities in Bulgaria.

London, Sept. 19.

The report of Mr. Baring, Secretary of the British Legation at Constantinople, on the atrocities committed in the Turks in Bulgaria, is at last published Barring, to his report, estimates that in the sanjjak of Philippopolis 12,000 Bulgarians and 200 Mussulmans were killed and fifty-two villages burned. The Bulgarians burned five small Turkish villages. The report gives a circumstantial account of the destruction of Batak. Hearing that preparations for a revolt were going on here, Achmet Agha was ordered to attack the town. The unarmed the inhabitants to give up their arms, but, distrusting his intentions, they refused to obey. A desultory fight succeeded, lasting two days. On the 8th of May the inhabitants had a parley with Achmet, who solemnly swore that if they gave up their arms not a hair of their heads would be touched. The villagers thereupon surrendered their arms. Then all the money in the place was demanded, after securing which the Bashi-Bazouks set upon the peaceful slaughtered them like sheep. About 1,500 took refuge in the church. Baffled at all attempts to fire it from the outside, the Bashi-Bazouks finally climbed to the roof, tore off the tiles and threw burning pieces of wood and rags, dipped in petroleum, among the thickly-packed mass of human beings below. At last the door was forced open and the massacre completed. The inside of the church was burned. The only survivor of this slaughter to be found was an old woman, she alone remaining alive of a family of seven. Baring continues: "I visited this place on the 23rd of July. Hardly a corpse had been buried. Where a man fell there he may lies. In the streets, at every step lay human remains, rotting and sweltering in the sun. The stench was overpowering. Five thousand in all were killed here, and about eighty girls were carried off. The surviving inhabitants live in wretched huts outside the village in great misery. To Achmet Agha and his men belongs the distinction of having committed perhaps the most heinous crime that has stained the history of the present century. Nevertheless, he has been decorated by the Government, as have also several other leaders in these cruelties."

The report concludes: "There was undoubtedly a revolution which had to be crushed by armed force. But the Government is to blame for calling out the Bashi-Bazouks, for had it sent regular troops earlier, the Bashi-Bazouks would have been unnecessary. The manner in which the rising was suppressed was inhuman in the last degree, fifty innocent persons suffering for every guilty one."

Another Fight With the Indians —Gen. Crook's Report.

Gen. R. C. Drum, Chicago, Ill.:

The following dispatch has just been received from Gen. Crook:

Head-Quarters in Yellowstone Expedition, Camp Near Otter Creek, Dakota Territory, Sept. 15.

Gen Sheridan, Chicago:

Marched from Head River, passing a good many trails of Indians going down the different streams we crossed between Head River and this point, generally working their way in toward the different agencies, although some of the trails looked fresh. Our animals were not in condition to pursue them from the 6th of July camp of Island River I sent Capt Mills, of the Third Cavalry, with 150 men, mounted on our strongest horses, to go in advance to Deadwood to procure supplies of provisions. On the evening of the 9th, near the Slim Buttes, he discovered a hostile village of thirty odd lodges, and by his there that night and started them by surprise yesterday morning, capturing the village, some prisoners, and a number of ponies, and killing some of the Indians. Among the Indians was the chief, American Horse, who died from his wounds after surrendering to us. Our own casualties were slight, but among them was First Lieut. Von Luttwitz, of the Seventh Cavalry, wounded seriously in the knee, and his horse amputated.

In the village were found, beside great quantities of dried meat and ammunition, many goodies, portions of officers' and citizens' personal effects, and various other instructions that the Indians of this village had participated in the Custer massacre. Our main column got up about noon that day, and was shortly after joined by a considerable body of Indians, who the prisoners said, belonged to the village of Crazy Horse, who was camped some days between Belle Fourche and Cheyenne. Another Fight With the Indians. Gen. Crook's Report.

FORT LARAMIE, WY., Sept. 18.

GEN. R. C. DRUM, Chicago, Ill.:

The following dispatch has just been received from Gen. Crook:

HEAD-QUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PLATTE, DEADWOOD, DAKOTA TERRITORY, Sept 15.

GEN. SHERIDAN, Chicago:

Marched from Heel River, passing a few small bands of Indians on the way, to the different streams we crossed between Heel River and this point, constantly working my way in toward the different agencies, although assured by half-breed spies and Crow scouts we met in coalition to prevent them. From the north fork of Grand River I sent Capt. Mills, of the Third Cavalry, with 150 men, mounted on our strongest horses, to go to agencies to badness to procure supplies and provisions. On the evening of the 5th, near the Slim Buttes, he discovered the Indian village of fifty-one lodges, and by daybreak their night and attacked them with the following results: Capt. Mills, by surprise, yesterday morning, captured the village, some prisoners, and a number of ponies, and killing some of the Indians. Among the Indians was the chief, American Horse, who died from his wounds after reaching camp. Our casualties were slight. Killed, among them was First Lieut. Lattoody, of the Seventh Cavalry, wounded seriously in the knee and leg, since amputated.

In the village were found, beside great quantities of dried meat and ammunition, so many garden portions of officers' and non-commissioned officers' uniforms, as other indications that the Indians of this village had participated in the late massacre. Our main column got up about noon the 6th, and we have been encamped on a considerable body of Indians, who, the prisoners said, belonged to the village at Slim Buttes. Their camp was completed some where between their own village and Lo Little Missouri River. Here we baggage-rooms for the cars. Miss Hosmer observed that Gibson was forgetting his hat-box. She caught it up to give it to him, when the cover fell off, and she perceived it was empty. "You are leaving your hat behind you," she said, "or it is not in your box." "No," he replied, "I did not intend to bring it." "Oh!" responded she, "I suppose you mean to buy a new one, and have brought your case to save purchasing mother." "No, I have plenty of hats." "Well, then, in the name of common sense, why do you bring this unnecessary incumbrance?" "Well, you see, Miss Hatty, my value counts one, my carpet-bag makes two, and I bring my hat-box to complete the trio. I always travel with three pieces."

The Council Service.

THEY are a sturdy-going conservative lot, the old Counsellors, and never do their hearts beat with a throb more quickly than when the owners nor the others. The line, which includes over fifty large steamers, remains exclusively in the hands of the men that started it. There is no stock-jobbing or patronage about it. The men employed are selected for their worth, and not at the instigation of any meddlesome directors. The engineer in Liverpool is Mr. Charles Mac Iver, one of the founders, whose son is one of the members of Parliament for the town—a straightforward, practical man, with a personal knowledge of nearly all his vessels, and a still more intimate knowledge of his ships. He exacts the strictest attention to duty, and never passes a ship without finding out in detail, often drives down to the docks and inspects the steamers in port from the stokehole to the wheelhouse. The hour of his coming is never known, and if any man abroad away from his post that man might as well resign. An owner (Mr. G——) died in Liverpool recently who had for nineteen years held the chief position in the service, while others had been promoted over his head. He was a sober man, an experienced sailor, and a skilful navigator. Many wondered why he never rose, and some tell this anecdote in explanation: One night old Maclver drove down to the Huskisson dock, and asked, on one of the steamers, for the officer in charge. The watchman stated that he had gone on shore, but would be back in an hour or two.

"Who is it?" asked Mr. MacIver.

"Mr. G——, sir."

Very well; when Mr. G—— comes on board, tell him to take my carriage and drive to my house."

When Mr. G—— reached the house he found Mr. MacIver seated in his study.

"You were absent from your post, tonight, sir; I wanted to see you; that's all." And Mr. G—— was dismissed on the ingenious old gentleman, in whose eyes a neglect of duty was the worst possible offense, and never from that night to the day of his death was he promoted to a more responsible position.

On another occasion Mr. MacIver was on board one of the steamers as she was passing from the river into dock, and stood watching some sailors hauling a rope under the direction of a mate in uniform, who was helping them with a will. Mr. MacIver was secretly pleased with his zeal, and looking like on the shoulder, said, with affected severity, "We do not engage you for that kind of service, sir." The mate relinquished the rope at once, expecting a further reprimand, but during the next week he was promoted from the third to the second rank. Appletons' Journal for October.

How a Man Was Cured of Swearing.

THEY tell a curious story in the Methodist—somewhat amazing absent-of a dull fellow named Morgan, a miner, who was greatly addicted to swearing. He appears to have made an excellent addition to the celebrated army of Flanders, or have been a fit companion for the proverbial sailor. Everything was done to guard him against the curse, but in vain, but without avail. He had other vices besides, among which were card-playing and drinking. On one occasion he was in a room in the tavern with his companions, engaged in a game of "old sledge," and the stakes were considerable. The room was underground, next to the brewery and very dark, and the gamblers were obliged to use candles. The game became very exciting, and Morgan constantly lost. At every misfortune he railed and swore mad even his hardened companions were shocked. At length he was entirely "cleaned out," and the torrent of blasphemy that flowed from his lips was frightful to listen to. Falling on his knees he defied heaven in language that caused his listeners to shudder. Finally, having become exhausted, he rolled over into a corner and fell into a drunken sleep. After about an hour he awoke. Everything was in pitchy darkness, but he still heard his friends wrangling over their cards as they continued their game. Morgan called out to them and asked how they could play in the dark, and why they had put the candles out. They answered in a tone of astonishment: "Dark? why, it's no darker here than it was before you fell asleep. The candles are still lighted; can't you see them?" Morgan sprang to his feet and shrieked, "No, I can't see anything. My God, I am stricken blind!" They gathered about him in great excitement, making various tests to judge whether he had really lost his sight, and this appeared to be the case. The wretched blasphemer fell on his knees and implored them to send for a clergyman, which they presently consented to do. While waiting his arrival Morgan lay on the floor sobbing and groaning in the most pitiful manner. When the preacher came he made him a long discourse on his impiety, but he declared he would not offer prayer for the restoration of Morgan's sight unless he would promise never to [illegible] again. This the miner, who was nearly delirious with terror, earnestly agreed to, and the minister, pressing his fingers upon the sufferer's eyelids, affected to go through a secret prayer. He removed his fingers and Morgan saw as well as before—the lighted candles, his friends, and everything. His gratitude may be imagined. It is hardly necessary to say that the whole business was a clever deception arranged by his two friends during his sleep. They simply withdrew the candles, thoroughly darkening the room, and then waking him with their loud disputing as they pretended to continue their game of cards. The clergyman, who was a sensible man, when applied to, readily entered into the conspiracy, believing that the goodness of the end in view which was to break Morgan's terrible habit of blasphemy, fully justified the means. And that end was perfectly accomplished, for Morgan never swore again up to the hour of his death, which was in the accident railway used in the mines to raise the coal. If you go to Frostburn and mingle much with the people you will find their stock of curious legends, and you will hear this one lepeated in detail.

"Mr. G——, sir."

"Very well; when Mr. G—— comes on board, tell him to take my carriage and drive to my house."

Why the Democratic Party Should Not be Trusted.

For the following good and sufficient reasons the Democratic party is now a thing of public worthlessness:

Prior to the War of the rebellion it used its influence for the propagation of the States Rights theory, and made a doctrine that was infamous under Buchanan, praiseworthy under Buchanan.

Before the war its policy was disgraceful, as whatsoever would encourage the leaders of the rebellion.

During the entire war its sympathies were with those who had been beaten in the organization, and who had gone over to the Confederacy.

To-day its policy is occupied by the same men who in 1861 left it to make war upon the Government.

All through the period of reconstruction its influence has been exerted in the aids of the ex-rebel elements, and whatever progress has been made towards the restoration of the Southern States has been in the face of its active opposition.

It has kept alive the prejudices engendered by the war, and has succeeded in the perpetuating of those who were made citizens by a constitutional amendment.

It is the same in sympathy and tendency as it was in 1861. There has been no conversion. On the contrary, the deformed retirement from power has rendered its prejudices and made it even more dangerous to the liberties of the people than when it was in power.

Every principal man in the seventeen ex-rebel states who broke forward to the revival of the last spring every Negro hater, and every Ku Klux and White League rabble throughout the South and North is in full fellowship with the Democratic party.

It is the secret and open enemy of our free school system, and in many States has allied itself with the Roman Catholic Church in the endeavor to break up the system by a division of the school funds in the interest of sectarian instruction.

It is under the control of the most dangerous elements of socialism in the country and vicious the South and the disloyal sentiment of the South.

Although some good men, forced to their desires to promote the public welfare, may be found in the ranks of Democracy, they are in such a helpless minority as to be powerless to institute reform or to maintain that which has already been secured.

The past record of the Democratic party, and its present record in those States affluent by its control, shows clearly that it lacks the integrity, the ability and the patriotism necessary to secure good government and an honest and economical administration of affairs.

It is pledged by the promises of its leaders and the sympathies of the followers to the payment of rebel debts amounting in the aggregate to not less than $1,000,000,000.

Its advent into power would be the signal for ex-Confederate raids upon the Treasury of the United States that would soon add to our public debt, depreciate the value of our currency, destroy our credit, and eventually lead to national bankruptcy and repudiation.

The policy of the Democratic party, as shown by its state war record, its record during the rebellion and since its close, and the course pursued by its acknowledged leaders in the House of Representatives shows it to be a reactionary party, opposed to progress, and in favor of overturning those measures which have been sanctioned by the people as the results of the war.

To restore power to a party that endeavored to betray the Union, that placed every obstacle in the way of preserving it, that discouraged enlistments and the raising of the needed revenues, that tried to elect a President in 1864 on the expressed declaration that the war for the Union was a failure, and that has placed itself on record against those amendments to the Constitution which gives political rights to the freedmen and protected the Treasury of the nation from Confederate claims, would be an act of national suicide unparalleled in the history of the world.

It has been challenged to show to the people a single public act performed during the past twenty years on which to base its claim for support and confidence, and up to the present time no answer has been made to the challenge.

It has given proof of its unfitness to govern the Union by nominating a man for the Presidency who at the breaking out of the war publicly proclaimed his disapproval of its object, during its prosecution secretly favored the Confederate, and at Chicago, in 1864, signed a resolution declaring the war for the Union a failure.

The new income tattoo of Samuel J. Tilden, of 1862, by collectors under any circumstances, appears to 1863, his name appears to pay the assessment of the first quarter of 1863. Mr. Tilden, his co-partners, or his agents through the New York Tribune, in the items which the latter gives, as a basis for its assertion that Tilden's income was over $1,000,000 that purchasing that statement to be the truth after them, he will leave unexplained the discrepancy between Tilden's oath to 1862 that his income for 1862 was $7,118 and his oath in 1863 that he realized in 1862 from $20,000, in the latter part of the year 1862. Both, we believe, are things two from were all or even one-fifth of Tilden's receipts as professional services and from investments during that year.

It is worth bearing in mind that when the Democrats obtained control of the House, they found among the employees of the body fifty-seven. Under additions, most of these discharged to the service. All of these vacancies were immediately renewed, and in filling them places they appointed not less than forty-seven Confederate soldiers. Here we have a practical illustration of what a Democratic victory would involve, it would involve the degradation of the Union and the promotion of the men, the removal of every Union soldier who holds an office under the Federal Government and the appointment of a horde of ex-rebels. On this point the record of the Democratic party is made.

If Tilden, as a private individual, will swear to a lie to save the income tax on $20,000, what assurance could the people have that his official oath would stand in the way of taking much greater robberies, should opportunity present itself?

THE BOYS IN BLUE.

Great and Enthusiastic Gathering of Union Soldiers at Indianapolis Eloquent and Patriotic Remarks.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 20.

The city is full to overflowing with loads in blue and every train that arrives brings additional delegations from all sections of the country. During the night and this morning large delegations have arrived from New York city, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, Allegheny City, Baltimore, Washington, Chicago, Louisville, and from the States of Illinois, Missouri, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Indiana, Texas, Michigan and other States. Seventeen States are represented. Addresses have been received in a large number yet to arrive during to-night and by the early trains.

ARRIVAL OF SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

A thirteen-car load of the veterans assembled in Union Depot, and were mailed to order by Gen. Spooner. After prayer by Chaplain A. C. Allen and music by the Lotz Band Gen. Logan, Senator Morton made the address of welcome as follows:

SOLDIERS of the Union: To me has been assigned the grateful duty of bidding you welcome to the State of Indiana and to her capital. Every soldier's face that I see brings back some memory of the past. Every remembered thrill has welcome. To this meeting you have come from the field of battle, where a debt of honor, and gratitude which we can never repay. To refuse to manifest this love for you in every possible manner, would be, in my opinion, to forfeit the respect of mankind. It would indeed be a poor encouragement for the defenders of the future. Should treachery in a single man ignore the debt, and the duty of the country to the soldier, who to help those our rulers. We have met here to-day in answer to a call of the Soldiers' Committee, to express gratitude in regard to the great monument to be erected by our citizens in this centennial year. It is the second object of our great organization. Fraternity, and to that subject we shall devote our service to the utmost extent of our ability. We shall talk much other and to our fellow-citizens, with the utmost freedom, about the policy that ought to govern us, and the men that ought to be appointed as the assistants of that policy. [Cheers.] The Nation has again been saved by offering for candidate to its highest office your old commander and friend Rutherford B. Hayes. [Great cheering.] We have to see whether he can rule our country and our chief, and to assure him that the old confidence we had in him in days of peril is no less than that we feel for him in our hearts to-day. [Cheers.] That is it. And now, soldiers, let me say a word more in this direction. You are every day met with the word, spoken at all the street corners by a class of men in this Republic, that "We ought to let bygones be bygones." In color—[Groans.]—that we ought never to revive nor remember the great events in the war through which we have passed. If that was a mere war of brute force and nothing else, then I agree we ought to forget the war. Private malice can not be a thing to fight to see who can pound the hardest, and which can stand the most punishment, and when one has given it up there is no reason why the second should shake hands, for they never had any principle at the bottom of the fighting [laughter]; but our war was not a prize fight of bullies. It was a struggle to see who was the wisest and the strongest. Ideas fight more than men, and every one of you who went out into battle the west under the inspiration of an idea, sacred, lofty and grand. Principles were at that most triumph. We never know until long after a war is over which idea has triumphed. The battle may not always be with the conquering flag. The cause that appeared beaten to-day may get the win in the forum of history, and therefore, as you believe in the sacred justice of the cause you fought as soldiers, so you will stand around it as citizens, guarding that cause until it is carried and fixed forever in history as a great moral truth. [Cheers.] We propose to stand ground around the war and the victories of the war, not to awaken any bitter memories; not to keep alive any hostility, nor do any thing but to say human feeling, but to the eternal and immortal credit to the brothers of this vicious war man. That is west we meet for brother [cheers], and to-day, fellow-citizens, we are confronted in our American politics with a united South, made its rest and branch, in its great majority, of those who fought against us in the field. To the United South we respond with the better sense of the United States [great cheering] and the same who saved the United States from below we United States are here to keep and throughout this Republic [cheers] and pather it here.

Now, gentlemen, it is our duty, in the absence of the President of the Association or myself to order, to preside here momentarily until you nominate some man to organize this Convention for Permanent work, but before I close I must read a telegram of great consequence. It is Chairman of this Association, and of the great Committee organized four years ago at Pittsburgh, wends to you in place of coming himself. This dispatch is signed by the man who gave the order to muster in the Union army years ago. If any man pull down the American flag shoot him on the spot." Applause.] This letter is for his, both are we here to-day. Let us take mighty assemblage of soldiers to ratify the nomination of Hayes and Wheeler, and look across the Ohio River at such a meeting of soldiers as would ratify the nomination of Tilden and Hendricks. Of what material would that soldiery be composed? Of rebels, of conquered traitors, of the broken-down accessories, of our mere traders, of every sort of enemies of the country.

We are bold to let bygones be bygones, and look at the future. Yes, bygones are bygones. I have the honor to present to the house a letter of sympathy from the Soldiers' Committee, at your Convention on the 20th inst. Unforeseen circumstances will not prevent my attendance. It is a source of unfeigned regret that I cannot be present at an assemblage of the gallant men who performed the labor of the salvation of the country. In regret is the deeper as it was my wish to be with you on the occasion of your

SOLDIERS. Face to face on the occasion which calls you together, my sentiments cannot be over-estimated. It be my sincere belief that the tranquility of the country has been preserved by the courage and the unconquered energy which have always been crowned with success. It appears to me that you again for aid in a contest involving the public honor and prosperity, and the continued tranquility of the Union. No party in the forty years of our National life has done so much for the good name and welfare of the country as the patriotism and the services and its perseverance. In public life the Union arose illed by Washington, you met all fear to be well enter upon the discharge of the responsible duties with a patriotism and a love for the Union which no party can legitly as unquestioned. The civil war brought to the task imposed on each fear-ful responsibility, but you met it with a patriotism equal to the occasion. The Government on the battle-field was saved, and by the same providence, he unshaken for centuries to come. The same spirit has been shown in peace. A case held in bondage has been emancipated and elevated by the sword of conquest. The rights with which they have been endowed by the generosity of the nation to be protected. Recent occurrences indicate, I fear, that the same spirit which made you heroic in battle is not absent on distant. In the election of 1876 the right of suffrage in those are to be insulted and foiled if need be by the whole lightning of the Government. A generous confidence and fraternity should be extended to those who sustain it in its manful obedience to the requirements of the Constitution and law. Every soldier who was in the front of battle, of hostility, to any portion of your fellow-citizens, was defeated by the bayonet and sword in the political field the pamphlet and the ballot. Should be disappointed in the battle of election. We will sustain our South-ern fellow-citizens in the exercise of their rights and every privilege which we possess. Their interests are ours. We are one people and we continue to resist, bow and heretofore, the power of the sword to change the form of government and convert together in regard to the political fu-ture of this country from the men who acted in opposition to the Union in the field. Let bygones be bygones, and forget and forgive, assuming that this Republic shall forever be the land and the home of a free people. We shall, we trust never have to fight another battle for the life of the Republic, but if that should be necessary, we shall be found in the front of battle, as we were in the days of the past. Applause.] Let us be united, and all will be well. Let us be united, and forever. Let us be united, and forever. [Cheers.] Let us be united, and forever. [Cheers.] Let us be united, and forever. [Cheers.]

Our Political Outlook.—In this issue we call attention to the people of Charlevoix county the tickets which are to be voted on next week Tuesday. Our views concerning the nominations of the several conventions (convention held in some cases three ago) have been fully expressed. We regretted certain circumstances for the following reasons. The whole county was not fully represented. The Convention was composed of the delegates from many townships who were not to secure the end they were elected for, but to advance the personal desires. His [illegible] and three of the conditions in [illegible] depend upon one contingency, viz. H. H. Ward's personal [illegible] Harris. For months [illegible] in Republican ranks, [illegible] personal [illegible] and [illegible] disgusting his movements, [illegible] Republicans [illegible] The result of said nomination [illegible] was a foregone conclusion of the nomination of C. D. Hall for Sheriff, H. H. Harris for Judge of Probate, and A. R. Upton for Clerk and Register. Now to prove this [illegible] sore a little, [illegible] nomination of H. Cooper as [illegible] of Probate. Wm Harris was appointed [illegible] to [illegible] the vacancy [illegible] Ward was not [illegible] within his power [illegible] to appoint, and [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] Mr. Harris has discharged [illegible] with fidelity and credit. His ability is of a high order, and his character is unquestioned even by his political opponents. Mr. Wood. Now the question comes home to the people of this county, shall we allow the personal spite of one person against another to take precedence over the public interest? Shall a competent, faithful and deserving officer be cast over to gratify the personal spite of O. D. Wood and his lieutenant? Shall we lower the standard of morality in county affairs? The people of that county have a distinct record [illegible] campaign which buried Mr. Wood under the political sod, and will they [illegible] that memory is still fresh [illegible] Democrat in this movement? We call upon the people to repudiate his work. The gentlemen whom we support are well known, and their names will need no [illegible]

THE NEWS.

AT HOME.

THE Superintendent of General Recruiting has been directed to forward 300 recruits to the Department of the South, as follows: One hundred and fifty for the Second Infantry, at Atlanta; fifty for the Third Infantry, at Holly Springs, Miss., and 100 for the Sixteenth Infantry, at Huntsville, Ala. Recruits have been obtained on the frontier for the 2,500 cavalry recruits authorized by Congress, and the cruiting officers detailed in Nebraska, Kansas and Wyoming have been sent to their regiments.

MEARNS Hospital surgeons of large experience in yellow-fever epidemics, have been detailed by the Superintendent of the Marine Hospital Service to proceed to Savannah and furnish all possible assistance to the health authorities in preventing the further spread of the contagion among the Atlantic coast cities. It was confidently believed that the infection would not proceed north of the places where it was then prevailing.

A THUNDERBOLT had fatally occurred in Forest and Tioga Counties, Pa., caused by heavy rains suddenly raising the mountain streams. Two cabins near Ralston were carried away and three occupants, sixteen in number, were all drowned. One of the families, named Parks, consisted of father, mother, and five children, and the other was made up of a Mr. Cooper, his wife, six children, and a Mrs Adams, the mother of Mrs. Cooper. Other lives are reported lost in other sections of the flooded region.

THE blowing up of the observations in Hell Gate, in the East river, off New York, occurred on the 24th, under the supervision of Gen John Newton, and was a complete success. Thousands of people had gathered in all the available localities for witnessing the grand climax. The explosion took place at a little before three o'clock p. m., and the effects are thus described: "In a straight and seemingly narrow line running north and south for about 300 yards the water whitened, and arose nearly ninety feet or four feet high. A dull thud was heard, the rocks trembled beneath the feet of the multitude, as if from two quick, short pulsations of earthquake. The water, which appeared to remain stationary for an instant, broke and spirted up in irregular, ragged, yellowish masses, about twelve feet high, mixed with dark smoke from the dynamite. Then it fell back, and in a moment the river resumed its peaceful aspect. Then a mighty cheer arose from all the northeast side of the city and from the steamers and boats, and steam whistles were blown, and bells were rung out joyously, and all was over. The report was scarcely noticeable, and not so much as a ripple was caused upon the water, save just over the spot where the explosion took place. There was no concussion in the air, and not a pane of glass was broken in the city or on Ward's Island." A New York dispatch of the 24th says the general feeling was that the work had been effectually done, and the obstructions in the channel successfully demolished.

FIVE members of the Chicago whisky ring—A. R. Dening, G. F. Hurnegin, B. Dickerson, Jonathan Abel and Simon Powell—who were serving out their sentences for being concerned in the whisky frauds, were released from jail on the 26th on payment of fines amounting to a little over $1,000 each. Ex-Alderman Hildreth, who had returned from Canada with the understanding that, on the payment of a fine of $3,000 and costs as a penalty for his crooked transactions as a gauger, his case would be nolle prossed, and ing officers detailed in Nebraska, Kansas and Wyoming have been sent to their regiments.

THE blowing up of the observations in Hell Gate, in the East river, off New York, occurred on the 24th, under the supervision of Gen John Newton, and was a complete success. Thousands of people had gathered in all the available localities for witnessing the grand climax. The explosion took place at a little before three o'clock p. m., and the effects are thus described: "In a straight and seemingly narrow line running north and south for about 300 yards the water whitened, and arose nearly ninety feet or four feet high. A dull thud was heard, the rocks trembled beneath the feet of the multitude, as if from two quick, short pulsations of earthquake. The water, which appeared to remain stationary for an instant, broke and spirted up in irregular, ragged, yellowish masses, about twelve feet high, mixed with dark smoke from the dynamite. Then it fell back, and in a moment the river resumed its peaceful aspect. Then a mighty cheer arose from all the northeast side of the city and from the steamers and boats, and steam whistles were blown, and bells were rung out joyously, and all was over. The report was scarcely noticeable, and not so much as a ripple was caused upon the water, save just over the spot where the explosion took place. There was no concussion in the air, and not a pane of glass was broken in the city or on Ward's Island." A New York dispatch of the 24th says the general feeling was that the work had been effectually done, and the obstructions in the channel successfully demolished.

ACCORDING to Vigo dispatches of the 26th the United States steamer Franklin had reached that port. On being informed of her mission Tweed was greatly dissatisfied, as he had hoped, on arriving at Havana, to avoid, through the influence with the officials there, being surrendered to the United States authorities. The commander of the Franklin had been advised that Tweed would attempt suicide, and had been instructed to keep him closely confined and leave him no chance to jump overboard.

CONSTANTINOPLE telegrams of the 26th say the Porte had telegraphed to its representatives abroad that it had sent 18,850 Turkish pounds to the Ottoman Bank in London with the understanding that, on the payment of a fine of $3,000 and costs as a penalty for his crooked transactions as a gauger, his case would be nolle prossed, and he had been instructed to notify Serbia that Russia would not support the preposterous demand of Prince Milan as King. A council of ministers had been held for the day before, at which it was decided to reject the conditions of peace recently presented by the Powers and the Porte. The council resolved that Servia would not submit unless in the case of foreign complication, and that she would fight until the independence of Servia and Bosnia had been achieved.

LATE Vigo dispatches say that Tweed had been removed from his fortress prison to the United States steamer Franklin. William Hunt, his companion, had been released. He insisted, after he was set at liberty, that the prisoner was not Tweed at all, just "seeing," as he had all along claimed to be. Hunt registered his name at the hotel as "R Sands." The Franklin sailed on the 28th, and it was thought she would reach New York in about thirty days. Hunt, alias "Sands," sailed for Southampton.

A CATTARO special of the 29th says the Montenegrins had declared that they would not countenance a peace unless extensive accessions of Turkish territory were obtained.

—The ladies of Norwich, N. Y., who had all been buying "hand-made lace" from a gypsy woman at one dollar per yard, were somewhat taken aback at discovering that the alleged crepe from the store kept by the husband of one of their number, and that he was willing to sell them all they wanted at a quarter the price they had paid the gypsy.

—A little four-year-old girl, having been instructed that the angels were clothed in white, surprised her parents by the remark, after a recent shower followed by flossy clouds, that the angels were hanging out their clothes to dry.

THE Superintendent of General Recruiting has been directed to forward 300 recruits to the Department of the South, as follows: One hundred and fifty for the Second Infantry, at Atlanta; fifty for the Third Infantry, at Holly Springs, Miss., and 100 for the Sixteenth Infantry, at Huntsville, Ala. Recruits have been obtained on the frontier for the 2,500 cavalry recruits authorized by Congress, and the cruiting officers detailed in Nebraska, Kansas and Wyoming have been sent to their regiments.

MEARNS Hospital surgeons of large experience in yellow-fever epidemics, have been detailed by the Superintendent of the Marine Hospital Service to proceed to Savannah and furnish all possible assistance to the health authorities in preventing the further spread of the contagion among the Atlantic coast cities. It was confidently believed that the infection would not proceed north of the places where it was then prevailing.

The Liberty of Will-Making.

JUDGE PARSON, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in a recent decision thus defended the liberty of will-making:

"The growing disposition of courts and juries to set aside last wills and testaments, and to substitute in lieu thereof their own notions as to what a testator should do with his property, is not to be encouraged. No right of the citizen is more valued than the power to dispose of his property by will. No right is more solemnly assured to him by the law. Nor does it depend in any sense upon the judicious exercise of it. It rarely happens that a man bequeaths his estate to the entire satisfaction of either his family or friends. . . . The law wisely secures equality of distribution where a man dies intestate. But the very object of a will is to produce inequality and to provide for the wants of the testator's family; to protect those who are helpless; to reward those who have been affectionate, and to punish those who have been disobedient. It is doubtless true that narrow prejudice sometimes interferes with the wisdom of such arrangements. This is due to the imperfections of our human nature. It must be remembered that in this country a man's prejudices are a part of his private. . . . Where a man has sufficient memory and understanding to make a will, and such instrument is not the result of undue influence, but is the uncontrolled act of his own mind, it is not to be set aside by chancellors without sufficient evidence, nor upon any sentimental notions of equality."

The Capture of Gie Northfield Bandits.

MANKATO, Minn., Sept. 22.

On Thursday morning, Sept. 18, nine miles west of Madelia, in Watonwan County, two of the four Northfield bank-robbers were found by Capt. Wilcox, of Blue Earth County woods, and the parish of whom had been abandoned, applied to a Norwegian farm-house for bread and butter. Paying for the same, they departed, and joined their companions, 200 rods ahead on the highway. A son of the farmer, aged sixteen, said: "Then we came to Madelia I must go to Madelia and give the alarm." The father replied, "I am afraid they will accuse you of knowing to his father, he slipped away and, mounting a horse, rode to Madelia and gave the alarm, which was readily believed and responded to with alacrity by several parties there. Three miles south of the place under the guidance of the boy, and they succeeded in surrounding and surrounded, while the robbers were lying among some high grass and willows known as the bank of the river on their hands and knees. Shots were at first exchanged at long range, but finding themselves hopelessly hemmed in by eight men and a lad the escaped on eight or ten minutes, one of the robbers, apparently the leader, fell dead, two others going down badly wounded, while the fourth threw up his left hand, exclaiming, "For God's sake, don't shoot." Upon which the Sheriff ordered him to advance, which all the party were levelled at his breast. As he approached he surrendered his weapon, a Smith & Wesson revolver. He was then ordered to bring up his companions. "Boys," said he, "I am done for; they are shot to pieces." A group of three were found, one of whom was dead, and the other two mortally wounded, while the fourth threw up his left hand, exclaiming, "For God's sake, don't shoot." Upon which the Sheriff ordered him to advance, which all the party were levelled at his breast. As he approached he surrendered his weapon, a Smith & Wesson revolver. Good Taste in Tombstones.

The two special reasons for the erection of stones of any kind over graves are either simply to mark the resting-place of the deceased, and by an inscription to testify to the world some special virtue which those who pass by may take a lesson from; or, by a pompous monument, to certify to the veneration and esteem in which some public character or benefactor was held, and with what affection he should still be remembered. Let us see what we can find in accord with these objects. Head and foot stones are of course admissible; a single large cross, of good design, is very appropriate at the head of a grave. Upon this may be cut the name, date of birth and death of the person interred, part of the 23d verse of the 14th chapter of Revelations, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." Upon which the Sheriff ordered him to advance, which all the party were levelled at his breast. As he approached he surrendered his weapon, a Smith & Wesson revolver. He was then ordered to bring up his companions. "Boys," said he, "I am done for; they are shot to pieces." A group of three were found, one of whom was dead, and the other two mortally wounded, while the fourth threw up his left hand, exclaiming, "For God's sake, don't shoot." Late Fashion Items.

Passes for carrying specie are in fashion again. They are made of fine silver wire, and are suspended from the chatelaine.

Matelasse woolens have larger squares and figures than those worn last year, and seem to be more raised above the surface.

The "New port" wrap is the same given to a pretty woolen shawl with white ground, wrought with blue or scarlet stars or circles.

The fashion of cutting the edges of overskirts and polonaises into squares is much followed for plain costumes of silk, cashmere or alpaca.

New braids for trimming dress-goods of woolen twills, through which are threads of chenille. The fringe used with these has chenille threads also.

Basques of new dresses have vests in front, and the back is elongated in front to represent a peasant jacket, and pin with the trimming on the back of the skirt.

New belts of velvet and of leather are wide girdles, pointed behind and in front, and laced with silk cord. Straight belts are ornamented all around, with square clasps of silver.

Rich Arras cloths of China crape are of delicate colors, lilac, rose, or cream, or else dark blue or Cardinal red, and are trimmed with white silk lace sewed on the popular Smyrna lace designs.

The colored nets for the hair are fast becoming popular with young ladies. The hair is not now braided before being put up in the net, but is tied in a straight loop, which is called the Catogan loop.

Solid-colored stuffs in matelasse, armure and basket-woven patterns are in great favor with people of quiet tastes. They come in all the stylish shades of prune, invisible green, bronze and seal brown.

English collars of linen remain the favorite shape, but are worn very high behind, with the points in front turned over widely, leaving the throat exposed. The novelty is to enter the linen with small stars of embroidery.

The novelty in Chambery gauze is velvet stripes of delicate colors, with dots and dashes in the thin alternating stripe of gauze. Cream velvet-striped grenadine is exceedingly handsome, also pale rose and lilac, and these are to be made up with velvet skirts.

English cabinets are brought out in foulard patterns, with soft finish that makes them resemble the fine French foulard cambrics. They are shown in stripes, dots, crossbars, and in dannak patterns in the stylish gray-blue, brown and navy blue colors. They cost 75 cents and $1 a yard, and 27 inches wide.

Among rich and stylish materials for polonaises is the fine damask camel's-hair, thick, soft and pliable, and of the handsomest quality of brocade. It comes in Oriental designs that are very indistinct, but when traced out are found to be palms, arabesques and scrolls. The colors are rich and strong, well to be mass, sandy hair and mustache. Another, who calls him-self Jim Lewis, is of good size, well proportioned, sandy hair, smooth face, bearing a three weeks' growth of beard. He was wounded badly through the chest in Northfield, and carried his arm in a sling at the time of the surrender. He was also wounded in the shoulder.

The whole four were armed with Smith & Wesson revolvers, and knew well how to use them. They were four sure and fleet horses, combining speed and travel in the very rainy weather of the past two weeks in the Blue Earth woods. The four riders, who were conveyed to Madelia, the dead man placed in the hearse, while the living occupied rooms upstairs in the Vought Hotel, under proper guard, with numerous visitors curious to look upon the robbers who had been trailed, and lost, and looked for with many searchers eyes and hearts stimulated by a regard for the peace and order of society, and possibly by the heavy rewards for the arrest, living or dead. The Sheriff has the robbers in charge, and will deliver them to the authorities of Rice County, in which the robbery and murder were committed, upon proper requisition.

A Stranger at the Centennial.

MANY strangers at the Centennial are not yet aware that they can't get out, even for a moment, and get back on the same entrance fee. I saw an old man try it the other day. He says to the gateman:

"I want to go out a minute. You'll know me when I come back, won't you?"

Gateman—Yes; I'll know you by a fifty-cent stamp.

Stranger—What! Ain't the money I paid good for all day?

G.—Yes; it's good for all day if you stay in all day.

S.—But I want a bite t'eat. It'll cost me fifty cents in here.

G.—That's the rule, old man, and you'll have to stand it. But I'll tell you what you can do. You can go down by them pilings, and there's some boys outside will sell you a sandwich for twenty cents.

I followed the old gentleman down by the pilings to witness his investment. Sure enough, he found an auburn-haired boy with sandwiches, and, taking one through the slats, passed out a fifty-cent stamp. Then he held his hand through for the change.

"This is 1876," says the brick-top Arab.

S.—Well, I guess I knowed that before. Gim my change!

Arab—This is Centennial year.

S. (snapping his fingers mechanously through the crack)—Here, boy! I don't want no foolin'. Gim my change right away.

A.—Hon't you know this is Centennial year?

S.—Yes, sholy I do. Gim my change, you owlacious scoundrel.

A.—Hon't give no change Centennial year.

S.—You cussed, infernal, red-headed brat of Satan, if you don't gim me thirty cents I'll come out there and get a policeman hold of you.

A.—Now, mister, that wouldn't be business. You don't want to come out here and pay fifty cents to get back just for thirty cents—and if yer was he do it for spite, where'd I be when you got out. You see, this is Centennial year. Have to unkeour jack this year. Now, you go along quiet-and-nice, and it'll be the same next Centennial.

Finale—Arab performs a short war-dance, and yells, "Run here, Jimmy! I've done it to another of 'em!"

Stranger walks off, rubbing his bald-ered brow and muttering:

"Well, I will be eternally dig-blasted if ever gumdriest if this ain't the skippiest place I ever struck!"—N. Y. Ofhaver.

THE POWER OF WORDS.

JOSHUA NEWLAND was awakened one night by a strange noise in the room occupied by him as a sleeping apartment. He aroused himself, sat up in bed, and discovered a man in the act of ransacking the drawers of a bureau for plunder.

"Friend," said Joshua, "this is an unreasonable intrusion, and I would be justified in having you punished for it; but first I wish to talk with you a little. Come sit by me while I ask you a few questions."

The man was frightened, but his amusement and astonishment from the gentleman he was attempting to rob was beyond expression. His first impulse pointed to flight, but the benevolent countenance of Joshua reassured him, and he threw near the bedside and seated himself.

"I wish to ask you," began the worthy gentleman, "why you engage in a pursuit so disreputable as this, when the rewards of honest labor are so remunerative and so well assured?"

"Because," replied the man, "I can find no honest employment."

"Tut, tut, sir; speak the truth or not at all. There is plenty of work for those who wish to labor, and every man that is blessed with health can readily earn an honest living for himself and family. Have you no trade?"

"I served my time with a gunsmith, sir, but have not worked as a journeyman since I was twenty-one, except—"

"Go on," said Joshua, "except what?"

"You will think none the better of me for the explanation."

"Perhaps not; but certainly none the worse. You owe me a little confidence for the breach of it, and I expect you to trust me. You might detected you, and you must tell me the truth. Tell me all, and then if I can do you a favor I will."

The words were spoken in kindness, and the burglar responded by nerving himself for what he viewed an important revelation.

"Well, I was going to say—except in the penitentiary."

"So you have been there already?"

"Yes."

"For burglary?"

"No, sir."

"Tell me all about it, man. What crime did you commit that consigned you to prison?"

"None whatever, sir."

"That is not the truth. It is scarcely impossible that you were incarcerated if you had not offended against the law."

"I swear that I speak the truth. I was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary for a crime that I did not commit, and that I did not know had been committed by any one till I was arrested for it. I was a decent man then; that I am no longer am I the first to cast the stone at me."

"Did no legal charge and punishment necessarily make a bad man of you?"

"I will tell you the facts in my case, and then you can judge more understandingly. I had finished my apprenticeship according to agreement, and was making arrangements to go into the business on my own account. My means were limited, but I had managed to save a few hundred dollars; and the girl I was engaged to marry had the same amount. We calculated very closely, and found that economical management would enable us to commence business and housekeeping in humble style with out going in debt. I engaged a small shop, bought some tools, and had matters well arranged for business when we decided to marry. We indulged in a little trip to Louisville, where we stopped only three days, and returned very happy; for we had no apprehensions of evil, and certainly did not imagine what was in store for us on our arrival in Chelhmnti. We had scarcely reached home when I was arrested for grand larceny. The stolen goods were found in my shop, but how they came there I know not, and I declare before God that it is a mystery to me yet."

"The evidence was all circumstantial, but it was tested and distorted into what appeared a perfect chain, and I was convicted before I thoroughly realized it. The last dollar of our savings had been exhausted in efforts for my defense, and my wife was forced to labor for her own support. Her former friends deserted her because she was the wife of a convict, and she was often in distress for the necessaries of life; but the climax of her miseries came when she found herself the mother of a baby boy. Lack of nourishment and nursing did the fatal work, and only a few days after the birth of the child she was borne to an humble grave, with the little darling cold upon that breast that should have given it life and strength."

The man bowed his head upon his hands and tears trickled rapidly through his fingers, while his strong frame was convulsed by many sobbings. Newland's eyes were not dry, and several moments passed without a word from either. The would-be burglar at length resumed:

"I served out my full time, and it is but just to say that I experienced better treatment in the Penitentiary than I have outside of its walls since I left that institute. A few days before receiving my discharge I resolved I would not return to Cincinnati, but go away into the world where my disgrace was unknown, and work at my trade like an honest man. I journeyed as far as Pittsburgh, and obtained a situation there at the first shop at which I applied. I had worked but little more than a week, however, when a man named Hardin, who was a journeyman in the shop where I learned my trade, came along and applied to the boss for a job. He appeared very much dissipated, and seemed just recovering from the effects of a 'spree,' so his application was refused. But he had seen me in the shop, and, probably to humble himself for his ill luck, denounced me as a 'prison-bird,' at the same time greatly exaggerating the offense I had been declared guilty of.

"I was immediately discharged; and the boss said to me that he would be doing but the right thing to withhold my wages as a penalty for having imposed upon him as an honest workman. I was naturally timid, and limited time the sooner I left the city the better it would be for my safety. This was discouraging enough, and I was about to leave the shop, when I reflected that after serious thought it occurred to me that my best plan, after all, would be to go back to Cincinnati, and by a strict and honorable course of life, live down the false charge against my character.

"I arrived here about four months ago, and sought for employment at my trade, but was driven from every shop in the city. I then attempted to engage in some other pursuit, and even sought employment as a common day laborer; but various accidental encounters with former acquaintances continued to disclose the fact that I was a discharged convict, and I have been denied even the most menial employment. How I have subsisted is a mystery to myself, but it is a fact that I have not partaken of one good, wholesome meal since my return to Cincinnati. An old negress, who was my washerwoman during my apprenticeship, gave me something like a dinner two days ago, and since then I have not tasted food. Breaking into this house is really my first attempt at crime, as God shall judge me; and starvation alone goaded me to this. I repent that I am here, and that I did not accomplish my original purpose, for now I feel that I can lie down and die in happiness having told my tale to willing ears and a believing heart; in the verdict of the world, I am innocent of positive crime."

"God bless you!" responded Joshua. "but now," he continued, "you shall fast no longer. It is near morning, so I may as well dress, and we'll take up some plans for the future over an early breakfast. You have had a poor show for your time of life, my friend, and I am sure there is better fortune in store for you."

Poor John McMasters was overcome at such an exhibition of generosity, for he fashioned a picture of the human heart he had never before witnessed, and lowept tears of joy; but Joshua went vigorously to work to feed and clothe this new subject of his bounty, for he was convinced of the man's truth, and saw a promising germ of good in him.

These events happened in the second year of the war of the rebellion, and, before breakfast was over, McMasters' patriot suggested to him that the finest opportunity to regain the reputation so unjustly fleeced from him could be found in the service of his country. He declared himself anxious to enlist, and in three or four days subsequent to his attempted burglary he was enrolled as a private in an Ohio regiment.

The real gist of this sketch is in its sequel, and it is more than usually interesting for the lesson it teaches. The man who was falsely accused, unjustly convicted and subjected to a punishment that threatened to stamp him with everlasting disgrace, proved to be brave and trustworthy when tried was restored in him; and within twenty months from the date of his enlistment, rose through the different grades in rapid succession to the rank of captain of a company. At the close of the war he returned, with scores of honorable scars and stumps on arm, to attest to his service; but he had established a claim superior to that the highest patent of nobility can bestow, and he is respected accordingly. He is to-day a revenue officer in one of the most flourishing cities of ashster State.

Had Joshua Newland raised an alarm on the night of the attempted burglary, and hauled John McMasters over to the officers of the law, he would have added one more to the armies of vagabonds that infest our land; but by a contrary course he secured a valuable recruit to the ranks of good citizenship, for which act he gained, in many a time:

"A higher reward than the money offered
By the willow-shaded brook!"

Since then, the fragrant blossoms have come
To the border of many a stone;
And a bridge is over the brook that sings,
As of old, to pleasant rhyme.

And two are straying upon the bank
As I pen these wandering words,
And they talk of the happy school-day time,
And they watch the building birds.

But a stream there is with a grander flow,
All by a weary shore,
And lovers will cross in a different school,
And help each other along!

—George Cooper.

A Journalistic Feat.

A Philadelphia newspaper man, who served a little time during the Rush times, lately did his first traveling. On his return home the first thing he wrote was some "advice to travelers." His advice was as follows: "For traveling, carry a crowbar to open car windows; a Spencer or Henry-Martini rifle for protection against linekmen and hotel clerks; a good supply of equable temper, and a large valise to contain greenbacks,"

Shooting an Anaconda.

In the New Quarterly Review, Mr. W. H. Drummond, of African sporting fame, tells how he came upon a twenty-foot serpent one morning very early.

"Life was already stirring; faint rustles, and once a breaking twig, denoted the wherealouts of antelopes, or, it might be, of their enemy, the leopard, while the calls of birds resounded on every side; but amid the rustling became louder, and it was evident some animal was coming up the track by which I was going to descend, and as last it got so near that I could distinguish the rattle of sharp hoofs among the hawklers and stones behind me.

"Suddenly there was a dull sound, as of some heavy body falling, followed by a confused noise of struggling, a half-choked blast, which I thought I recognized as coming from the throat of an 'unkunala,' and then silence again. I could see nothing from the position I was in, and did not care to alter it till I could see distinctly enough to fire it necessary; so I retained my seat for a few moments more, and then began cautiously to descend again. But a few steps sufficed to explain the cause of noise.

"I got round the corner of the rock, under the upper side of which I had been sitting, and came in sight of an immense boa constrictor, some ten or twelve feet of whose huge body was in view, employed in licking the carcass of its victim, a young doe of the species I had expected, which lay, a shapeless mass, within a y

The Republican Party and the Finances.

The letter from Charles F. Conant, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to Senator Cragin of New Hampshire, which we publish elsewhere, contains a very complete and satisfactory answer, drawn from the official record, to the charges against the financial administration of the government of the Republican party which were made in the platform of the Democratic National Convention, and repeated by Mr. Tilden in his letter of acceptance. Those accusations have been met and refuted before, but never so forcibly and clearly as by the official figures cited by Mr. Conant. For instance, to the charge of Mr Tilden's letter that that the Government had not "lived within its income," Mr Conant regards by quoting the records which prove that since the war (for the period covered by the Government, after paying $1,035,041,845 in interest on the public debt, and $676,268,408 for claims and pensions arising from the war which was caused by Mr. Tilden's party, has met all its other obligations and had a surplus income over expenses of $624,165,123 more than $50,742,000 yearly in every year of the eleven since the war, the Government "lived within its income," and and taxation has not been reduced during the same period to an amount of $309,350,171

To the allegation of the St. Louis platform that during eleven years of peace there have been collected by Federal taxation thirteen times the amount of the legal tender notes, and that four times their amount has been squandered in useless expenditure, Mr. Conant replies by showing conclusively by the rudimentary processes of arithmetic that the receipts from taxes during the period named are over $900,000,000 less than the figures given (thirteen times the total of the legal tender notes), and that if the receipts from miscellaneous sources of revenue are also added to the yield of taxation of all kinds, still the Democratic platform is $600,000,000 out of the way. Of the total receipts of the Government for these years, less nearly three thousand million dollars, in exact figures, $2,980,865,365 were paid out for claims arising directly from the war, such as interest and principal of the public debt, pensions, payment of claims arising from the war, bounties, etc., leaving a total of only $1,298,808,456 for all the usual expenses of the Government for eleven years. Contrast these figures with the wilful assertions of the Democratic platform!

Another Democratic charge that expenditures and taxation have not been reduced is proven by the facts to be equally baseless. Mr. Conant shows that the revenue has been cut down from $558,000,000 in 1865, and $411,000,000 in 1870, to $287,000,000, a reduction of nearly one-half, that the expenditures, except for payment of debt, have been reduced from $520,800,000 in 1866, and $309,000,000 in 1870, to $238,426,787 in the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1876. This reduction, moreover, has been very constant for there has been very constant, for there has been some decrease of expenditure, as compared with the year preceding, in every year of the eleven except two. The average reduction has been $23,849,965 yearly, and the total reduction since 1866 has been $262,349,619. With this showing Mr. Conant contrasts the record of Democratic administrations. He states that the average annual expenditures of the eleven years succeeding 1850 exceeded that of the eleven previous years by 89 per cent; and that during the last three and a half years of Buchanan's administration the expenses of the administration exceeded its increase to the amount of $57,989,523, to meet which deficiency the Government issued bonds and Treasury notes to the amount of $68,495,000.

Mr. Conant's letter is a magazine of useful and important facts and figures; we advise our Republican friends to preserve its official statement for frequent campaign reference.—Detroit Tribune.

The national debt was decreased in the amount of $2,916,265 during the month of September just passed. And this the Tilden men call a "criminally extravagant management of the public finances." They can't favor the liquidation of our big war debt, unless that of their unfortunate Confederacy can be treated on an equality with that of the Government.

The Charleston News heads a telegram with the announcement that the whites in Robbins, S. C., are "in arms in self-defence, and under it we read "Two Whites Certainly Killed—Hutchinsville in Danger—Only Twenty-five or Thirty Negroes killed so Far."

The Business Revival.

Every thinking business man believes that the ebb tide in commercial affairs has reached, and that the future flow has begun, which will carry us on to a great era of prosperity that we have never enjoyed before. This belief is built upon no delayed harvest, but is the sure offering from every where, that trade is brighter coming up, like the putting forth of leaves and flowers after a warm rain in spring. But there is no room to be given for the devoutly wished for consummation to the Democratic orators who parade the length and breadth of the land, lamenting dire disappointment and distress perpetually everywhere. The business revival is taking place in spite of them, as the war was prosecuted to a successful termination in spite of their discouraging valedictories.

The New York Times in a long and well digested financial article, says:

A large portion of the business of wholesale merchants is now transacted for cash, and the largest merchants here in a more substantial condition than those who came into business a few years ago. Business of all kinds, too, seems to be springing up in all portions of the country. Mills which have been idle for years are again in motion, and on the whole there is every reason to believe that the evil effects of the financial panics of 1873 are rapidly passing away.

The Cincinnati Commercial, always one of the best journals in the West, in its business and financial reporting, also says:

Within a few weeks there has been a brightening of business prospects in Cincinnati that is cheering to witness. Our business men are in better spirits than for some years. They feel that we have reached bottom, and are again getting up in the world. Confidence is being rapidly restored. Orders have poured in, and leave us a decided tendency to speed activities. Country merchants having sold out turn up to buy, and crowd the streets, are coming in for fresh stocks. This is noticeable, and the fact encouraging to every Cincinnati man who has to deal with the public. Last year at this time we had no trade to speak of. Now we have it, and it is increasing daily. Our factories are starting up in all directions, and the whole city is taking on a new life. Our merchants are preparing for business, and this year we look for a boom in trade. Our Exposition, and thousands of visitors will be attracted to the Centennial. Our reporters yesterday, interviewed a considerable number of the most prominent men in business offices, and the general impression was that there was a marked and happy change for the better.

The Inter Ocean states as a matter of fact that "of all the prominent wholesale dry goods houses in Chicago it is understood that only one supports Hayes and Wheeler. They have had a taste of Republican administration, and they don't like it. Those whisky ring chaps feel that "reform is necessary" in order that they may not be interfered with when they conspire to rob the Government, such hence they support Tilden and Hendricks.

"You are a Northern man," said the proprietor of a New Orleans hotel, "you are a Northern man, and I can say to you privately what it is not policy for us here in New Orleans to say outside. Hayes's administration in New Orleans was a just one."

There has been another "trouble" in South Carolina in the general neighborhood of the village of Hamburg. The Georgia papers published in that vicinity have for about ten days past contained of scattering and sometimes fatal a series of skirmishes between armed Whites and blacks in an sparsely settled and remote from news centers region of Aiken county, the general version given of the disturbances covering first a raid of murderous bands of negroes on inoffensive whites, and, second, a rally of the peaceable and law-abiding "elements" of that region for the purpose of repressing in the mildest manner those manifestations of a lawless spirit on the part of ne'er-blood-thirsty negroes. Except from these sources and from a few brief hints in the Associated Press dispatches of the existence of some difficulty in that country no reports of the real origin, character and extent of this outbreak have yet reached the public. But it is already reminiscent the usual result heretofore. This last "negro uprising" (if the outraged and assaulted whites but one or two are reported to have been killed, and even the loss of so many lives on their part is doubtless of the rampant and butchering negroes at least a score have been shot down, and the death roll will probably reach a higher figure. Our authority for this statement is not some "rollical outraging monger," but that staunch Democratic journal, the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle and Sentinel.

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing diseases is unrivaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

It is certain, in that the remedies and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the case of disease, stamps it as one of the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to receive a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a remedial power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease which cannot be reached by any other means.

Such is the power of this combination that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame, every bone and muscle, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it cures as readily with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to persons so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief in the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Chronic Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Chills, Bilious Fever, Pleurisy, Pain in the Face or Bones, Boils, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Burns, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

The Republican Party and the Finances.

The letter from Charles F. Conant, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to Senator Cragin of New Hampshire, which we publish elsewhere, contains a very complete and satisfactory answer, drawn from the official records to the charges against the financial administration of the government of the Republican party which were made in the platform of the Democratic National Convention, and repeated by Mr Tilden in his letter of acceptance. Those accusations have been met and refuted before, but never so forcibly and clearly as by the official figures cited by Mr Conant. For instance, to the charge of Mr Tilden's letter that that the Government had not "lived within its income," Mr Conant responds by quoting the records which prove that since the war the net cost to the Government, after paying $1,355,161,815 in interest on the public debt, and $676,258,468 for claims and pensions, arising from the war which was caused by Mr Tilden's party, has met all its other obligations and had a surplus income over expenses of $624,105,125—more than $50,742,000 yearly. In every year of the eleven since the war, the Government "lived within its income," and said taxation has also been relieved during the same period to an amount of $269,259,121.

To the allegation of the St. Louis platform that during eleven years of peace there have been collected by Federal taxation thirteen times the amount of the legal tender notes, and that four times their amount has been squandered in useless expenditure, Mr Conant replies by showing conclusively by the rudimentary processes of arithmetic that the receipts from taxes during the period named are over $700,000,000 less than the figures given (thirteen times the total of the legal tender notes), and that if the receipts from miscellaneous sources of revenue are also added to the yield of taxation of all kinds, still the Democratic platform is $400,000,000 out of the way. Of the total receipts of the Government for these years, also, nearly three thousand million dollars—in exact figures, $2,807,826,583—were paid out for causes arising directly from the war, such as interest and principal of the public debt, pensions, payment of claims arising from the war, bounties, etc., leaving a total of only $1,298,808,428 for all the usual expenses of the Government for eleven years. Contrast these figures with the wild assertions of the Democratic platform!

Another Democratic charge that expenditures and taxation have not been reduced is proven by the facts to be equally baseless. Mr. Conant shows that the revenue has been cut down from $558,000,000 in 1866, and $411,000,000 in 1870, to $287,000,000, a reduction of nearly one-half; that the expenditures, except for payment of debt, have been reduced from $520,800,000 in 1866, and $309,000,000 in 1870, to $258,456,787 in the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1876. This reduction, moreover, has been very constant for there has been very constant, for there has been some decrease of expenditure, as compared with the year preceding, in every year of the eleven except two. The average reduction has been $23,801,965 yearly, and the total reduction since 1866 has been $262,040,619. With this showing Mr. Conant contrasts the record of Democratic administrations. He states that the average annual expenditures of the eleven years succeeding 1850 exceeded that of the eleven previous years by 89 per cent; and that during the last three and a half years of Buchanan's administration the expenses of the administration exceeded its increase to the amount of $57,989,523, to meet which deficiency the Government issued bonds and Treasury notes to the amount of $68,235,000.

Mr. Conant's letter is a magazine of useful and important facts and figures; we advise our Republican friends to preserve its official statement for frequent campaign reference.—Detroit Tribune.

The national debt was decreased in the amount of $2,015,365 during the month of September just passed. And this the Tilden men call a "criminally extravagant management of the public finances." They can't favor the liquidation of our big war debt, unless that of their unfortunate Confederacy can be trusted on an equality with that of the Government.

The Charleston News heads a telegram with the announcement that the whites in Holmes, S. C., are "in arms in self-defence, and murder it we read: "Two Whites Certainly Killed—Buttrieville in Danger—Only Twenty-five or Thirty Negroes killed so Far."

The Business Revival.

Every thinking business man believes that the ebb tide in commercial affairs has ceased and that the return flow has begun, which will carry us on to greater prosperity than we have ever enjoyed before. This belief is based upon no political theories, but is the conviction of business men here, that trade is brightening up, like the putting forth of leaves and flowers after a warm rain in spring. But there is no credit to be given for this desirable advance for reasons similar to the Democratic claims which pervade the length and breadth of the land, crediting the improvement and its many prophecies everywhere. The business revival is taking place in spite of them, & the war was prevented to a successful termination in spite of their discouraging vaticinations.

The New York Times, in a long and well digested financial article, says:

A large portion of the business of the country is already in new channels of trade, and the longer each is left undisturbed the more substantial must those who earn their living by it feel. Hosts of all kinds, too, seem to be eyeing one another, and the whole country is ready to take sides and fight. Mills which have been idle for years are again in motion and on the whole there is every reason to believe that the evil effects of the financial panic of 1873 are rapidly passing away.

The Cincinnati Commercial, always one of the best journals in the West, in its discussion of financial topics, also says:

Within a few weeks there has been a brightening of business prospects in this country that is cheering to witness. Our business men are in better spirits than for some years. They feel that we have reached bottom and are beginning to get up in the world. Confidence is being rapidly restored. Values have ceased to decline, and there is a concerted tendency to a slight advance. Country merchants having sold out their stocks, bought, and enjoyed the country, are coming in for fresh stocks. Time is remarkable, and the most encouraging of many Occidental features perceptible is call for business, and this year we look out of the way. Of the total receipts of the Government for these years, also, nearly three thousand million dollars—in exact figures, $2,807,826,583—were paid out for causes arising directly from the war, such as interest and principal of the public debt, pensions, payment of claims arising from the war, bounties, etc., leaving a total of only $1,298,808,428 for all the usual expenses of the Government for eleven years. Contrast these figures with the wild assertions of the Democratic platform!

The Inter Ocean states as a matter that "of all the prominent business circles of Chicago it is understood that only one supports Hayes and Wheeler. They have had a taste of Republican administration, and they don't like it. Those whisky ring chaps feel that reform is necessary" in order that they may not be interfered with when they conspire to rob the Government and hence they support Tilden and Hendricks.

"You are a Northern man," said the proprietor of a New Orleans hotel, "you are a Northern man, and I can say to you privately what it is not policy for us here in New Orleans to say outside. Gen. Butler's administration in New Orleans was a just one."

There has been another "riot" in South Carolina in the general neighborhood of the village of Hamburg. The Georgia papers published in that vicinity have for about ten days past contained conflicting and conflicting reports of a series of skirmishes between armed Whites and blacks in a county distant and remote (from news centres) portion of Aiken county, the general version given of the disturbance covering first a raid of murderous bands of negroes on inoffensive whites, and, second, a rally of the peaceable and law-abiding "rifle clubs" of that region for the purpose of repressing in the mildest manner those manifestations of a lawless spirit on the part of lawless thirsty negroes. Except from these sources not from a line brief sixteen the Associated Press dispatches of the existence of some difficulty in that country, no reports of the real origin, character and extent of this outbreak have yet reached reporters. But it is already certain that the usual result has attended the last negro uprising." Of the outraged and assaulted whites but one or two are reported to have been killed, and even the loss of so many lives on their part is doubtful; of the rampant and butchering negroes at least a score have been shot down, and the death roll will probably reach a higher figure. One authority for this statement is not some "radical outrage-monger," but that staunch Democratic journal, the Augusta (Ga) Chronicle and Sentinel.

The Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad runs through the centre of the tract, and the best part of the land is within a few miles of the line. Many thousand acres are already under cultivation, and the crops of the present season are unusually large and fine. DR. A. TRASK'S

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties of Electricity, and the Magnetic forces of the human body. At the end of twenty years he succeeded in producing, by chemicals, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts the power of which in removing diseases is equalled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is that the remarkable and unprecedented success of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment in the cure of diseases, stamps it as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be abolished from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that in many cases of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Paralysis, Lumbago, Sciatica, Nervousness, Nervous Headache, Female Weakness, Piles, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Kidney Complaint, Sick Headache, Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Ulcers, Sores, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Boils, Carbuncles, Tetter, Blotches, Eruptions, Pimples on the Face, Blackheads, Flesh Worms, Humors of all kinds, Canker, Dropsy, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Kidney Complaints, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Bad Breath, Catarrh, Consumption, Scrofulous Affections of the Spine, Diseases of the Throat, Chronic Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Inflammations, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Mercurial Diseases, Chronic Sore Eyes, Chronic Ulcerous Sores, Ague in the Face, Bronchitis, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Rheumatism, Scrofula, Indolent Ulcers, Fever Sores, Scurvy, &c., all of which arise from a corrupt or impure state of the blood, are speedily cured by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

A DISPATCH at Lansing gave to Mrs. Lathrop's threat of suicide instead of attempt of dandelion, and, taking a small dose thereof, she was presently speechless, and in a fair way to die. Her daughter, a little ten years of age, coolly referred to a medical book in the house for information concerning "any vomica," and thereby learned it was poisonous and complete in antidote, which she presently in going to frequent and large doses, and saved her mother's life. THE Greenback men of the Second District have nominated Prof. Dunn for Congress.

AN old gentleman by the name of Harris, living with his relatives on the Grand River road, about ten miles west of Dewitt, has put an end to his existence, while, on account of long-continued ill-health, had become a burden to himself and everybody else. One night recently the poor old man's burden became too heavy to bear, so he took his pocket-knife and, stepped into the room where his dead had to help him up and down with, adjusted a noose about his neck so that it would tighten as he fell back, and in that condition he was found dead next morning.

Produce of British Mines.

THE Inspectors of Mines report that in the year 1875 the produce of mines of the United Kingdom classed under the Coal Mines Regulations act was as follows: The coal produced amounted to 136,536,485 tons, an increase of 4,716,377 tons over the preceding year; fire-clay, 1,052,294 tons, a decrease of 135,407 tons; iron stone, 12,918,501 tons, an increase of 325,408 tons; shale, etc., 342,846 tons, an increase of 30,193 tons; making a total of 147,790,- 318 tons, being more by 6,398,481 tons than in the preceding year. The number of mines at work was 10 more than in 1874. But the number of persons employed in and about the mines declined to 535,845, a decrease of 2,981. The number of lives lost by accidents in 1875—namely, 1,241—shows an increase of 188. In 1874 the lives lost were one in 510 persons employed, but in 1875 one in 439; in 1874 one to 133,251 tons of mineral got; but in 1875, one to 118,730 tons. The coal produced in Ireland in 1875 is stated at only 129,291 tons; the quantity in Scotland was 18,597,597 tons. The inspectors report, also, under the Metalliferous Mines Regulation act of 1872, as amended last year, and state the quantities of mineral, but the statistics do not include undressed mineral which has been stocked, and not sold, treated, or used. The common product of 1875 is stated at 2,871,866 salable tons; lead ore, dressed, 70,044 tons; black tin, 12,593 tons; besides 790 tons contained in tin ore sold in stone, copper ore, 67,211 tons; rock salt, 101,119 tons, exclusive of 1,779,000 tons of white salt made from brine; zinc ore, 22,342 tons; limestone, 409,027 tons; building stone, 144,751 tons; flagstone, 49,980 tons; pipeclay and pottery clay, 9,-955 tons; slate and school slates and slabs, dressed, 154,282 tons; gypsum, 65,008 tons; gold (from Ireland) eight ounces; gold quartz, Merionethshire, 122 tons. The persons employed in and about the metalliferous mines under inspection increased to 38,955 in 1875; and the lives lost by accidents were 19, so one in 88 persons employed, having been only one in 547 in the preceding year. London Times.

Do Horses Reason.

IT would be difficult to convince some people that horses and dogs are possessed of reasoning powers, and as difficult to convince others who fondly love these animals that they are unable to reason from cause to effect. A story comes to us as well vouched for which will at least interest the reader if not convince him that horses are possessed of some of the human attributes that many people are wont to credit them with.

Among the many horses owned by the Highland Street Railroad Company is one which is said to give the horses a deal of trouble by slipping his halter and roaming at will about the stable. The halter was on each occasion buckled on as tightly as possible, but to no purpose, for the horse would invariably be found half an hour afterward making a dignified tour of the stables. This became monotonous to the hostler, and he determined to ascertain the modus operandi by which his equine friend secured his liberty. Again the halter was tightly buckled on, and taking a seat where he could watch him, Lookabout began to play sundry developments. Pretty soon a horse which stood beside the troublesome one was observed to poke his nose into his neighbor's stall, and catching the end of the halter-strap between his teeth he pulled at it. His first, second, and third attempts to unloose the buckle were unavailing, but with a perseverance remarkable even in man, the horse returned to his work repeatedly, and finally out dropped the buckle-tongue, the throat-strap fell, and the horse of inquisitive mind was soon quietly walking about the stable. A change of location was of course a necessity.

A large, homely, piebald gelding, owned by this company, used to manifest a strange regard to a white mare he formerly worked beside. In the stable he was hitched with a rope halter, and until a change was made he used to gnaw off his halter, march deliberately to the stall occupied by his mate, and squeeze himself into the small space which was only large enough to accommodate one horse comfortably, and a good deal of effort was required to separate the equines after they had become wedged in so closely.—Boston Journal.

An Extensive Swindle.

THOMAS HILSEN, who was arrested several days ago on the charge of swindling the firm of Thomas Hilsen & Co., of this city and a partner in the firm of Bond & Co., of Boston, wool dealers, out of a large sum of money six years ago in this city, is stated to be interested in another evil transaction. One of our city dailies has just returned from New York, where he was engaged with the authorities there in working up the case. It appears that when Hilsen came to this country in July, he formed the acquaintance on shipboard of the agent of a Paris banking house, who was sent to this country by Fennh capitalists for the purchase of a silver mine in Nevada. He brought with him a large number of drafts and about $25,000 in cash. Hilsen ingratiated himself into the French man's affections, and upon their arrival in New York engaged a handsome suit of rooms, where the latter was a guest. He was boasted and made much of, and introduced to a number of expert gamblers, who were passed off as gentlemen of large means. Finally a stylish cottage at Long Branch was hired, which one of the gamblers told the agent was his property. Finally a little game of faro was proposed, and in two sittings the unfortunate Frenchman lost $35,000. He paid over $16,000 in cash and gave checks for the balance. The cash was divided among three, Hilsen, it is said getting his third. The checks have not as yet been cashed, but parties are here now endeavoring to get the Frenchman to make the checks good. After the man had been deceived he was taken to Niagara Falls and other places, and then brought to this city. Finally the gamblers released their hold of him, and now he is anxious to get his money back. The affair leaked out through two of the gamblers, who are said because they were not treated out of ten of the proceeds promised them.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Historical Research About Fire.

ACCORDING to the fable of Prometheus he finds it of Indian origin; in the Vedas the god of fire, Agni corresponds with the Latin Ignis, is represented in a secret place whence the god Matarishvan forces him out, and makes him communicate the celestial fire to Manus, the first man. The very name of Prometheus is traceable to the Vedas, and calls to mind the process employed by the ancient Brahmins to obtain the sacred fire. For this purpose they used a stick called pramantha, which they ignited by friction; the upper yoi gives the idea of taking by force, a circumstance which strengthens the evidence afforded by the resemblance of that word to Prometheus. There were several ways for obtaining fire by friction; the most primitive one consisted in rubbing two pieces of dry wood against each other; but this was improved in course of time. A stick was made to slide very fast up and down in a groove; then came the "fire-drill," consisting of a piece of wood having a cavity in which a stick was inserted which was pome-l upon by the operator, who at the same time made it turn very fast, after the fashion of a whistle. The Brahmins used this drill, but with a cord rolled round it, by pulling which they gave an alternate rotatory motion to the stick. Another mode of obtaining fire was that of striking two flints together, etc. Prof. Joly now arrives at the question as to whether prehistoric man was in possession of fire. The Abbe Bourgeois goes so far as to say that it was known as early as the miocene period, because in the sands of the Orleannis he has found a piece of artificial paste having undergone altering to lt and lying in the midst of beings of the mastodon and rhinoceros. Our author considers the thing not impossible, but not sufficiently proved; nevertheless he is positive that the most ancient quarternary man did use fire; many fire-places, with ashes, cinders, half-calcinated bones and flagstones reddened by the action of fire, have unquestionably been found in caverns pertaining to the period of the reindeer, the bear and polished stone.—Prof. Joly, in Revue Scientifique.

Daniel Webster as a Boy at Table.

THE following story is told in a communication to the Boston Traveller: "Dr. Peabody, who used to be a physician, was a hero of the revolution, and after the war resided in Exeter, N. H. During the summer days he was wont to gather his horses here, look in the country, lodging and boarding in the fall. On one occasion, as the cold weather drew near, he went to the town where his horses were, and took the owner of the pasture, who was both farmer and tavern-keeper, to send his black horse home on a certain forenoon. 'Yes,' was the reply, 'I will send my boy down with your black horse on that morning, sure.' On the appointed day the General stood at his gate, and saw it approaching along the road, while on its back, astride of a saddle cloth and a coarse jacket, rode along in his shirt sleeves, a large, heavy, rough boy, his two very dark, its natural color having been deepened by the sun. On arriving at the gate the boy remarked: 'I have brought your horse home, sir.' 'Yes, so I see,' replied the General, who he found the pleasant task of 'seeing' Miss Jones lupposed upon himself. He argued that such duties were Cousin Dick's, though he never told him so. It would not have been pleasant to provoke him, and if anything could have offended Bachelor Brown mortally, it would have been to insist upon his offering any gallant attentions to the softer sex.

However, a day came at last which set the whole house in commotion.

Miss Amanda Dove had been invited to spend a week with the Hinkles, and Miss Dove, being a stranger, was to wait at the station until some one came for her in a carriage.

The Hinkles reshled some miles out of town, and had not occupied their residence for many months, as that people were not always properly directed by the neighbors.

It was decided that Mr. Hinkle should escort Miss Dove, but before the day of her arrival dawned, business had called that gentleman to Sheffield. Moreover, Mrs. Hinkle had the influenza, and the two boys were at boarding school. No one was to be found to drive, and neither Rose nor Adelaide could handle the reins. Miss Dove was to come at nine, and what would she think of them if no one came for her?

"Indeed," said Mrs. Hinkle, "it would be shocking treatment for the dear girl. I must ask your cousin Richard."

"You never dare, maumm," said Rose, aghast.

"In such a case, you knaw—" said Mrs. Hinkle.

"He'll not do it," said Adelaide.

"Of course not," said Rose.

Mrs. Hinkle shook her head.

"I fear he will not," she said, and, assuming an expression which would have done credit to Joan of Arc, mounted the stairs to cousin Richard's study.

"Are you busy Richard," she asked as she entered.

"Not at all—sit down," said Bachelor Brown.

"You see how ill I am," said Mrs. Hinkle; "I can hardly hold up my head much less drive, and Mr. Hinkle is away, and the boys too, and no one can handle the reins, and—"

"Well," said Bachelor Brown.

"And there is poor Miss Dove at the station with her trunk by this time," said Mrs. Hinkle, with a gasp.

"Ah," said Bachelor Brown, "what a pity."

Mrs. Hinkle felt she had not begun yet. Bachelor Brown could not understand what she wanted.

"It's a great favor—a great favor to ask, I know," she said, "but couldn't you just for once do it?"

"Do what, Marta?" asked Bachelor Brown.

"Go for her," said Mrs. Hinkle.

"For Miss Dove?"

"Yes."

"Oh, dear, no," said Cousin Richard.

"But—" began Mrs. Hinkle.

"Maria," said the old bachelor, "young ladies, my little cousins excepted, are no abomination. An affectual, convoluted, absurd set of creatures. I never had anything to do with them, and I never will. No doubt she's capable of finding her way here. They all appear to be. I shan't go."

Mrs. Hinkle retreated.

"What will she think of us?" she said, sobbing.

"Don't cry," said Rachelor Brown.

"I'll see if any of the hands over at the Oats place can drive over for her."

And out he went; but all the hands on Oats' place were busy with the hay, which stood in danger from a coming shower. Richard returned without the least success.

"A shower, too," said Rose. "Poor dear Amanda, I'll try what I can do with my cousin."

She found him quietly smoking and trimming and worrying without effect.

"Richard," she said, "you know I'm not a girl to make a scene about anything, but I am very much afraid that you will be compelled to go for Miss Dove."

"Not I," said Richard.

"Yes, you must," said Rose. "Poor dear Amanda, I'll try what I can do with my cousin."

Richard quietly smoked on, and Rose began to feel uneasy. As he did so, he hired men rushed out and began to attend to the horse and vehicle, and an old lady and gentleman appeared on the steps.

"So glad you're early enough to escape the worst of the storm," said the gentleman.

"I'm none in," said the old lady. "We were expecting you—for on such an occasion people always keep their appointments rain or sunshine, I believe."

"What on earth does she mean," said Bachelor Brown. "But it's very kind of them," and so while the old lady hurried Miss Dove away to dry things, he sat with the old clergyman in the parlor. "Do you feel at all nervous, sir?" said the old gentleman after a pause.

"No, sir, thank you," said Bachelor Brown.

"Most men do, sir," said the clergyman.

"Yes, lightning is a nervous sort of thing," said Mr. Brown.

"I did not allude to the storm."

"Indeed, sir."

"But to the approaching ceremony."

"Oh!" said Bachelor Brown.

"Is your mate, you know, you told me that you were too nervous to stand before the whole congregation in the church, and preferred a quiet wedding at my house," said the old man.

Bachelor Brown stared at him in astonishment. The truth dawned upon him.

"You expected—a young couple?" he said.

"Oh, you are quite young enough, sir," said the innocent clergyman.

"I'm half frightened," said Rose.

"So am I," said Adelaide. "But it's done and it can't be helped now. I'll manage to even him to forgive me, and it wouldn't do to leave a friend in such a position, you know, and I didn't say she was a child."

Meanwhile Bachelor Brown drove to the station. It was a long drive over a bad road, but he kept on his way very cheerfully. He was extremely fond of children.

When on reaching the station, he saw no signs of her presence, he grew alarmed. If she had been lost through his neglect he could never forgive himself. He ran his fingers through his curly hair and peeped into the ladies' waiting-room. Only a very fine full-grown young woman sat there, and she was with a courtesy as she saw him, and he addressed her:

"Have you seen a little girl waiting for some one?"

"No, sir," said the woman. "There were two came down, but they are gone."

"Oh, dear! ah, dear!" said Bachelor Brown; "I hope there's no mistake. It's a little Miss Dove, and if the dear little soul has gone astray I'm entirely to blame. Please make inquiries—there's a good woman."

As he uttered these words the full grown young lady in the waiting-room was seen to blush violently and arise.

"I'm Amanda Dove," she said, "and I expect some one from Mr. Hinkle's."

Bachelor Brown stood aghast. He had spoken of this lady as a "dear little thing." His face almost turned scarlet.

"I beg your pardon, ma'am, he began. "I expected to find a little girl—I wouldn't have used such expressions for the world—I—"

"I comprehend," said the young lady; "don't mind in the least. I—"

"Is this your trunk, ma'am," said Bachelor Brown, in a hurry.

"Yes, sir," said the lady, looking down.

In a few moments the two were driving toward the Hinkle's country seat. Never had Bachelor Brown found himself so close to any young lady, save his cousins, before. He was wretchedly confirmed, but somehow he liked it. How pretty she was, he thought. How pink and white; how golden her hair was. How the blue ribbons on her bonnet set it off. Then he began to wonder what she thought of him. Wondering thus, he forgot the road, and suddenly found that he had lost himself. To add to the dilemma, the storm, which had been threatening for hours, burst at the very moment when Bachelor Brown found it impossible to tell whether the left road or the right led homeward; and the horse was afraid of lightning and grew restive. Miss Amanda Dove was afraid of lightning also. She gave a little scream and clung to Bachelor Brown's coat sleeve.

Bachelor Brown looked down at her. It was such a soft, pretty thing to look at. Then he looked terrified. He cast a glance about him. Near the road was a parsonage connected with its church by a garden.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," he said, "we'll ask for shelter until the storm is over. A clergyman ought to be a Christian enough to take us in."

And driving to the gate, he assisted Miss Dove to alight. As he did so, a tall lady and gentleman appeared on the steps.

"They've made a mistake," said Bachelor Brown. "They think we—we are—people they expect—a—young couple, you know about to—"

"Oh, dear, do they?" whispered Miss Dove.

"Yes," said Bachelor Brown. "Now it would be very awkward to explain. And I like you so much, couldn't you like me, too, and let him do it—eh?"

"Do what, Mr. Brown?" said Amanda.

"Marry us," said Bachelor B.

"Of course not," said Amanda.

"What would the Hinckles say?"

"They'd be delighted," said Richard, growing bolder. Then he put his arm around her waist.

"I don't know much about this sort of thing, but you are the only nice girl I ever saw. Please, do; I'll be good to you."

"I know you are good," said Amanda, "but—"

"But, then, I'm ugly, eh?" asked Richard.

"Ah, no, not at all."

"Well?"

"It would be so odd."

"Well," said Bachelor Brown, "that's my fault, and they know I'm odd, my dear."

Four hours after the Hinkles heard the light wagon drive to the door, and rushed out to meet Amanda.

"We've been so alarmed," said Mrs. Hinkle.

"Such a storm," said Rose.

"Were you frightened? asked Adelaide.

But Amanda said nothing.

Uncle Richard, too, shrank back, as though he were afraid of something.

"Tell 'em, Amanda," he said.

"No; you tell them, Richard," said Amanda.

The Hinkles listened in amazement.

"What is there to tell?" asked Mrs. Hinkle. "What is all the mystery about?"

And cousin Richard answered sheepishly:

"Nothing—only we've been getting married. This is my wife, Mrs. Brown."

It was the only explanation ever offered. The Hinkles never enquired into it. It was always a mystery to them; and though they were positive in their congratulations, and always continued the best of friends, the fortune which might have been Rose's or Adelaide's rather troubled Mrs. Hinkle; and she always declared in family councils that she was perfectly sure Uncle Richard mirsred out of spite to punish Adelaide for the trick she played upon him.

"Orders" for Women.

FRENCH women are so far less fortunate than their sisters in most other Continental countries that there is no special "order" or "decorations" for women in France, and it is a very rare thing for a lady to be awarded the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor. At the present time there are not more than four or five ladies who possess this distinction, and one of them is an English woman, Lady Pigot, who tended the French wounded during the late war. The ladies who care for these outward and visible signs of social distinction must regret that they did not live 200 years ago, when, if they had been lucky enough to win the good graces of the Duchesse de Maine, they would have been able to sport the order of the "Honey Fly." The witty Duchesse, a granddaughter of the great Conde, and the wife of the Duc de Maine, the son of Louis XIV. and Madame de Montespan, held a literary court of her own at Sceaux, and exercised, with her courtiers, all her ingenuity in inventing, from time to time, some new diversion. It occurred to her one day that she would institute an order of chivalry for both sexes, and call it the "Honey Fly" Monarchie-mel. The idea was taken from Tasso's line, "She is tiny, but she can inflict severe wounds," which had been applied to her on account of her diminutive stature and great powers of repartee. The distinctive mark of the order was a gold medal, with the effigy of the foundress, and upon the reverse the lines quoted above. The members of the order had to take the following oath: "I sware by the bees of Mount Hymettus obedience and fidelity to the foundress of the order. I swear that all my life long I will wear the order of the Honey Fly, and obey the statutes. If I am false to my oath, may the honey become gall in my mouth, the wax tallow, the flowers nettles, and the wasps and hornets sting me." The costume of the order was a coat in cloth of gold, spangled with silver bees for the chevaliers; and the ladies wore a robe of green satin, embroidered with silver bees, and a diadem of flies in emeralds. The institution of the order was a great success, and the fetes in celebration of it lasted many days at the Chateau de Sceaux, which was the residence of the Duc and Duchesse de Maine; but the order did not outlive its foundress, whose latter years were passed in serious study, and who had long ceased to wear her "decoration."—London News.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

IN the course of less than two generations America has received an addition to her population, from foreign sources, of not fewer than 8,000,000 people.

IF takes 654 bites to satisfy a flea, according to the investigations of the celebrated entomologist, Herr Schenk-allemar, so that when you can count 654 feeding spots on your body you can know that that flea is satisfied and lies quits in mere change. In reality a mosquito is much cheaper to board than a flea.—Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal.

AN English magazine says: "Sentiment about the earth there are supposed to be 18,000,000 or 11,000,000 of lives alive. Thousands of the people are rich, some of them owe colossal fortunes. Rothschild could buy up the fee simple of Palestine, Goldsmid might rebuild the temple of Herod, Montefiore has money enough to cast a golden statue of King Solomon. But of the wealthy Hebrews not one is willing to go back."

THE German Government has built the mammoth kitchen. It is 1,000 feet long, and constructed of stone and iron, and is designed to supply food for the army in times of war. Two 1,000-horse-power engines drive this machinery, which is capable of boiling down and condensing for transportation 187 oxen, and will grind 350 tons of flour, and make 300,000 loaves of bread daily. It can also supply enough preserved oats for one day's feeding of the horses belonging to an army of 280,000 men.

M. FAYE proposes that the French Academy of Science should fix a limit of elevation, beyond which no ascent having a scientific object in view should be allowed to go, or its results received by them. According to this eminent savant, the extreme height of 7,000 meters answers all the scientific needs of human science; the atmosphere extends, indeed, more than twenty-eight leagues further—the observations of shooting stars, of which 24,000 meters and 100 culminations is about seventy-five miles in height, assigning a thickness of thirty leagues to the aerial stratum which surrounds our globe—but thirty leagues, the first two only are of importance, and, notwithstanding the fascinations of adventure, it is not the exploration of the fortune which might have been Rose's or Adelaide's rather troubled Mrs. Hinkle; and she always declared in family councils that she was perfectly sure Uncle Richard mirsred out of spite to punish Adelaide for the trick she played upon him.

FRENCH women are so far less fortunate than their sisters in most other Continental countries that there is no special "order" or "decorations" for women in France, and it is a very rare thing for a lady to be awarded the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor. At the present time there are not more than four or five ladies who possess this distinction, and one of them is an English woman, Lady Pigot, who tended the French wounded during the late war. The ladies who care for these outward and visible signs of social distinction must regret that they did not live 200 years ago, when, if they had been lucky enough to win the good graces of the Duchesse de Maine, they would have been able to sport the order of the "Honey Fly." The witty Duchesse, a granddaughter of the great Conde, and the wife of the Duc de Maine, the son of Louis XIV. and Madame de Montespan, held a literary court of her own at Sceaux, and exercised, with her courtiers, all her ingenuity in inventing, from time to time, some new diversion. It occurred to her one day that she would institute an order of chivalry for both sexes, and call it the "Honey Fly" Monarchie-mel. The idea was taken from Tasso's line, "She is tiny, but she can inflict severe wounds," which had been applied to her on account of her diminutive stature and great powers of repartee. The distinctive mark of the order was a gold medal, with the effigy of the foundress, and upon the reverse the lines quoted above. The members of the order had to take the following oath: "I sware by the b

O. D. WOOD, Chairman.

The Democrats are seeking to break the force of the facts in regard to the impending avalanche of Southern war claims, by dwelling on the circumstance that though many measures of this class have been introduced they have not been passed. Of course they have not; a hostile Senate, and the veto power in the hands of a brother President, have happily made their pushing, under the present circumstances, useless. But with a Democratic Congress, a Democratic Executive, and the political ascendency of that party resting almost wholly upon the Solid South, the situation would be vastly changed. Even now, that Representatives may satisfy their anxious constituents, these measures are introduced when their present passage is out to the question; and those constituents reflect complacently upon the fact that if their claims are not yet allowed, they are at least filed for consideration under more favorable circumstances.

Fourteen hundred school children shook hands with President Grant at his reception in Ithaca. Among the visitors was a man with a baby in his arms. The President shook the little hand and patted the little head, and the remarkable infant answered with a crow and a shrip of delight. One person who pressed forward with great anxiety, and old gentleman with a wig, a very wrinkled face and an immense pair of spectacles with iron bows, said that he was the oldest man in Tompkins county; he was the first man in Tompkins county who ever rode on a steamboat; he had seen Gen. Washington; was in the war of 1812, and was sure that Gen. Grant would want to see him. He shook hands when it came his turn, with great vigor and energy, enjoying it probably more than any one else of the 4,000 present.

The construction of a pipe through which to force oil from the oil regions to the Atlantic Ocean-such is the scheme of the Pennsylvania Transportation Company. The company's officers have signed contracts for the Pipe, and expect to lay it at the rate of three miles a day, breaking ground for the enterprise at Brady's Bend, Butler county, Penn., this week. The pipe will extend to Philadelphia and to Baltimore.

Newfoundland fishermen for many years have abandoned the fishing on the banks of Newfoundland to French and to American fishermen, and have fished in shore or off Labrador. The shore fishery showing signs of exhaustion this year, some crews went to the banks. They found their vessels were not adapted to contend with the chopping seas on the banks, and determined to build vessels after the model of those used by the American fishermen.

Divers have explored the exploded Hell Gates reef and pronounced the work of last Sunday a complete success. The rocks are loosened up and can be easily removed, rendering the passage between the ocean and New York by Long Island Sound safe for vessels of the heaviest burthen. But the opening of this channel not only a change in the course of the European steamers, and for the present it will scarcely affect ocean travel at all. There are no advantages in the Hell Gate route, even when it is without a rock, for vessels bound for Europe.

An organist played in another church than his own recently, and was complimented by the organ-blower for the proficiency shown in his voluntary. "By the way," added the man who manipulated the wind apparatus, "I've blowed that voluntary before."

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN SONG, 1876.

'Tis a true saying that a man is known by the company he keeps—and these lines are written to show the character of the Democratic Presidential candidate for 1876:

When the old hat was new, boys,
Sweet Tammany and Bill Tweed
Were having control in New York,
And though it was agreed,
The tricks one did not think of, sir,
The other surely knew,
And so they swelled their bank accounts,
When this old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
Oh! how the people groaned!
They stamped the city treasury up,
And no wonder was stunned,
At plans that Tom invented, sir,
Which built up very few,
Who roomed Hell-gate Sinnemor,
When this old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
And everything serene,
Who formed the Credit Railroad,
The flows into Tammany Hall,
Which helped to rip the Hudson, sir,
The back she stopped for,
Before with what they did not want,
When this old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
Its crest sublime were all set,
To "Live and let live" was the word,
The Ross was made scapegoat,
Immortal Sam had failed,
Though still one of the crew
Of arch conspirators, sir, who,
Since then old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
Its every member the same,
Or nearly made a false route,
Upon his former name,
And had the law but reached the Fraud,
And Ingersoll been a stiffed sail,
Like Tweed he'd worn a stripped suit,
When this old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
A tango found
Was Tilden a figuring
The Democracy on,
He pardon'd crooks great and small,
And Tweed with the rest,
For mammy had no use for him,
When this old hat was new.

Although the hat is old, boys,
And bleached by rain and sun,
I'll wear it like an heirloom dear,
Until the victory's won,
I'll swing it in the air boys,
For Hayes and Wheeler, true,
And next November I will vote
A dozen bright and new.

A Speech by Mr. Blaine.

Hon. James G. Blaine addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting of citizens in Boston a few evenings ago. He was received with rousing applause, and for seme time minutes after he appeared upon the stand before he could begin his speech, but at last he did so. The audience increased as his well-chosen points and well-rounded sentences fell on the ears of the vast audience. He began as follows:

I am opposed to the election of Samuel J. Tilden as President. [Applause and a sensation in the crowd. "We will arrest." I am opposed to Mr. Tilden because a great crisis in the country is to be proved unfaithful, and only in his hands at every point from wrong. Better hordes, he passed by on the other side. [Laughter.] Mr. Tilden was elected to be counsel. I am opposed to Mr. Tilden because he has been in search of the presidency for years. Speak payments on the 1st of January, 1879, broke the ring the whole country, and connected it ever with the bad reputation of the West and the worst reputation of the South. He is the candidate of southern claims. I am opposed to Mr. Tilden because he came in on the side of

It is a law existing that is known by the company to keep—and those that are willing to show the character of the Democratic Presidential candidate for 1876:

When this old hat was new, boys,
Sam Tilden and Bill Tweed
Were become cronies in New York,
And mighty well agreed.
Each had a pull and stuck at nix
To cheat—certainly know.
And so they swelled their bank accounts,
When this old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
Oh! how the money went!
They scooped the till treasury up,
And cut were not content.
An peace had been declared, sir,
Known by very few,
But counted Sullivan their enemy,
When this old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
And something over,
While Sambo rab the Railroad,
The blow was to the Republic, sir,
With Hoffman up the Hudson, sir,
Was done we know that well.
Before was taken that old hat went,
When this old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
All parties combined were elected,
The Tom at ring was broken up,
The Boss was made ashamed of,
But, until 'twas at last broken,
Though it cost of the rest,
To get "Soup tilled" and keep it up,
Such like old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
If we have learned the force,
On country under a false reform
Upon his income tax,
And had let us but touched the fraud,
And dealt him justice—we enjoyed exil,
Like the old hat was new.

When this old hat was new, boys,
A Young thing to sing
We'd throw a fizzing
The President to be,
And three times three and shout,
And Tweed to take five,
For same, just as we did for him,
When like old hat was new.

Although the hat is old, boys,
And knocked for rain and wear,
It was like an honest man
Until the victory knew,
Of saving it in the hedging,
And now is used, don't tell who
A decent height and row.

A Speech by Mr. Blaine.

Hon. James G. Blaine addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting of citizens in Boston on the evening of the 7th. He was received with tremendous applause, and it was some time before he could proceed again the usual before he could begin his speech, but when he did the enthusiasm increased, as was natural when people and well reminded, centered on the event of the year—the election of the President.

He referred to the election of Samuel J. Tilden to the Presidency, Applause, and a wave in the audience. You know I was opposed to Mr. Tilden because at a great crisis in the history of the country he was found fail, and when I say blunting at every point from every leader found him to be a failure on the other side and every word of and and cowardly to have existed. I am opposed to Mr. Tilden because he has been in favor of the resumption of specie payments on the 1st of January, 1879, broke his faith with the country, and stood by the side of the Democratic party of the West and the the best resources to the end, and was the worst repudiator of the South to come in the settlement of Southern affairs. I am opposed to Mr. Tilden because he, more than any other man, represents that fatal heresy which would make a nation of thirty-seven discontented, loss of life, and disaster. I am opposed to the election of Mr. Tilden because in the name of a reformed party he represents a disorganizing party (laughter and cheers) that has sold out its principles for the emoluments of the city of New York. I oppose Mr. Tilden because he is a prominent member of the Democratic party, whose record in the past, and its candidates here in Massachusetts for governor and senator, mean the nullification of the war, and the overthrow of the results of the war. (Applause.) I am opposed to Mr. Tilden because he is a member of the Democratic party which has opposed me all and no policy that was not a war measure from the time of the first session of the Thirty-seventh Congress to the present time

ADVICES from Alexandria, Aug. 27, say: A new calamity now engages the attention of all Egyptians even more than the financial decrees of the Khedive or the refusal of the Government to accept the judgments of the New Courts. It seems that many of the cavalry horses that have returned from Abyssinia in the last two months came with a horse sickness—disease upon them. The doctors pronounce it a kind of typhoid fever. It is most infectious and terribly rapid in its progress, death resulting in many cases in a few hours. It is stated, and on good authority, that five horses, one mule, instead of isolating the infected animals, sold them all at very low prices to the fellaheen. Thus they have been distributed throughout the country, and in the neighborhood of Cairo alone several hundred horses are reported dead. A well-informed correspondent thus describes in the Italie the effect of this malady in one of the business districts: "It is raving now among the horses, mules and donkeys of our district most furiously, and many villages are named where not one horse has escaped the disease. It is to be feared that this calamity will interfere very disagreeably with our work, as the cartmen will be afraid of horses, and the donkeys to carry sand and cotton to the stations will be very scarce. The Government is alone to blame that the disease has spread so quickly over the country, selling everywhere for a napoleon or a pound the sick cavalry horses returned from Abyssinia, instead of isolating them."

"WHAT'S the difference," asked a Centennial visitor, pointing to Memorial Hall. "what's the difference between that building and a vein in a young lady's arm?" "Why, one's an art gallery and the other's a gal artery." They carted him off in an ambulance.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

BYRON SEE Co. Treasurer.

The October Results.

In its summary of the results of the October elections the Cincinnati Times sets down the objects of the struggle as four in number:

1. The election of Secretary of State in Ohio.

2. The election of Governor in Indiana.

3. The election of Congressional Representatives in Ohio.

4. The election of Congressional Representatives in Indiana.

The Republicans started out in the fight with a plurality of 5,544 on Ohio. The Democrats stated out in the fight with a plurality of 17,252 in Indiana; with thirteen to retire Congressmen in Ohio, and with eight to five Congressmen in Indiana. Now let us see exactly what has been done.

1. The Secretary of State in Ohio was elected by the Republicans by a slightly increased majority.

2. The Governor of Indiana was elected by the Democrats by a very much reduced majority.

3. The Congressional representation of Ohio now stands seven Republicans to thirteen Democrats. In the next Congress it will stand twelve Republicans to eight Democrats—Republican gain of five.

4. The Congressional representation of Indiana now stands five Republicans to eight Democrats. In the next Congress it will stand nine Republicans to four Democrats—Republican gain of four.

Three out of the four objects the two parties set out to win, the Republicans won. And it came so near winning the fourth that another effort will, in all probability, be successful.

The Republican majority in Ohio has been increased. The Democratic majority in Indiana has been decreased. In both States there have been very large Republican gains in Congressmen.

The result is in a very high degree cheering to the Republicans. The solitary crumb of comfort the Democrats can extract from the fight is the election of Blue Jams by a very meagre majority. Graveyard whistling will not conceal their dismay.

The Democratic Peace Convention at Chicago in 1864 nominated their man for President, who was duly beaten, and who now endorses Tilden. The question might here be asked whether McClellan would have run better if they had called him a reformer, and had so labelled their platform. This same class of politicians, with admirable consistency, opposed all the great measures of reconstruction. They opposed the amendments, Thirteen, Fourteen, and Fifteen, of the Constitution, and a long time denied their validity. But they have at last modified their policy, and, without admitting the necessity or justice of these measures, but denouncing those who adopted them, they now say by their platforms that they believe in the Union, and are "devoted to the Constitution with its amendments, that the Union, eleven years ago, was happily rescued from the dangers of a secession of States." How this "unpleasantness" was gotten over, or who rescued the Union, or whether they encouraged it, or had any hand in it, they do not mention. But reform is their watchword. The platform proposes reform, with much rhetoric and with much reiteration of the word, but with little intelligible description of the thing. It is altogether too indefinite and confused to indicate any serious purpose of reform.

If the Democrats should happen to succeed in the pending election, we should look for as many children to be christened "Wilkes Booth," as there were "George Washington," in the early years of the republic. The example was set at Washington, by a man whom the Democratic House of Representatives rewarded with an office, from which, however, he was obliged to withdraw by the force of public indignation.

That such a situation would open to the country a Pandora's box of evils no candid man can deny. We thought we detected an incredulous smile upon even the countenance of Mr. Kilbourn when he stated that the Democratic party had not naturally entered the national field? In the face of these facts, statement reduces itself to nothing to a science. The policy of Republican extravagance was not only unfavorable. The official figures of the Treasury show that for no single year within the last seven years has the Government been able to ignore entirely both maturing receipts appropriations, but in each year payment has been made upon the principal of the National debt, and in the last seven years over six hundred millions of dollars have been paid home. And in the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the amount paid was $20,000,000. Is not this a splendid exhibition of the National debt. Mr. Kilbourne perhaps may also suppose that during the years from 1861 to 1870, and up to 1873-1874, when Mr. Buchanan left office the annual expenses of the Government were in excess of its annual receipts nearly $700,000,000 Dollars, as stated before by Secretary Boutwell and Mr. Kilbourne "reform" and retrenchment under Democratic administration, with its unbridled, honest and conservative economy. Samuel J. Tilden, Chief Executive! Mr. Kilbourne gave his audience a little "soldier talk" and displayed the "bloody shirt" rampant, as he said would be the Republican policy. We did not see wool dirt in the Confederate army of the bloody shirt campaign now being waged by the solid south against Republicans, both black and white. Democratic orators generally when this side of the "bloody shirt question. But Mr. Kilbourne's speech was well received by the Democrats, and all helped to wash respectful attention by the Republicans. A word concerning Mr. Kilbourne personally: A personal acquaintance with him and his honest reading fully warrant us in pronouncing him an honest man, and a man of considerable Christian gentleman. A fair against whom not one word of defamation can be uttered, and is to good a man to be sacrificed upon the political altar. I people of Charlevoix county, who have vital harbor interests, and seeking completion, are ill advised, upon so misleading Mr Kilbourne for the third time as a Local News.

"MR. PERKINS," said Col. Bangs to the reporter of the Argus, "I wish you would stir around to-day and get up a sensational local of some kind. The paper's been infamously dull lately. Now why can't you give an account of a sewer-pipe that you saw off the Capes yesterday engaged in a fearful combat with a whale, during which the whale swallowed the sea-serpent all but the end of his tail, which is using the whale to death—or something of that kind—something exciting and lively?"

"I can't write about it if there was no sea-serpent, can I?"

"Thunder and lightning, Perkins! have you no imagination? People don't want facts; they want sensation. Now, there was a boat capsized and drowned at Bridge street bridge, and made a million dollars, which he has brought home to give to his widowed mother, who has been talking in washing and suffering from rheumatism and cricks in her back. Now, a boat like that would attract attention; it would excite remark; people would want to buy the paper. Give your fancy play and lumber your imagination. That's the way I used to do."

"It's a first-rate plan," said Perkins.

"Why, a young and active man like you might easily scare up some sort of an anecdote about a man in this town named Smith, who traveled across the plains twenty years ago with his family and drank water until he swelled out so that when he went in to swim his abdomen would grace the bottom, and he would then try to stand on his head, and find that the water was over his head, and that he was broader than he was long. Things like that—the public want. They like to be entertained; they care more about excitement than truth. Now why can't you get up a collision for me? We haven't had a collision for ever so long."

"I dunno; maybe I might."

"Explain to them that the two trains were going at SIXTY miles an hour when they met, and that when they struck the down train ran on top of the up train, skipped along the roofs of the cars and came down on the other side, without doing any other damage than smashing the ventilators and sweeping off a couple of brakemen who were sitting on top of a freight car. Paint it strong. Say that the train was going so fast that they slid ten miles apart before they could be stopped after the accident; and introduce a humorous incident about an old lady in the parlor car, who was so nervous that she swallowed her spectacles, and never the impression that it was the smoked sausage that she'd brought along for lunch, and attempted to put her umbrella in her carpet-bag."

"Maybe I might work it up some how," said Perkins.

"Or, I tell you, s'pose you fix up a story about a returned sailor, just arrived from Europe, who has brought $,500,000 in gold in his pocket, and Jesse's they thought him dead, and they put him in a coffin and chucked him overboard, and after a while he came to the surface and was picked up by the Cannibal Islands, where he smoked into the temple and passed himself off as some new-fangled kind of an idol, and finally got three months of his worshipers to follow him aboard ship, where he chucked them into the hold, fastened down the hatches, and sailed for Oahu, where he sold out his cargo, and made a million dollars, which he has brought home to give to his widowed mother, who has been talking in washing and suffering from rheumatism and cricks in her back. Now, a boat like that would attract attention; it would excite remark; people would want to buy the paper. Give your fancy play and lumber your imagination. That's the way I used to do."

"It's a first-rate plan," said Perkins.

Savings Banks.

THE savings bank system of the world is the subject of an interesting report by the Italian Bureau of Statistics to the Statistical Congress at Buda-Pesth. The savings bank is modern. The first institution of the kind was opened at Berne, in Switzerland, in 1787. The first in the United States was founded in Philadelphia in 1818. In 1872, there were in Europe 9,000 savings banks, more than one to each 5,000 of the population, and holding a quarter of the total deposits of $1,100,000,000. Three years later, in the United States, there were less than 700 savings banks, with $1,881,000,000 of deposits. The United States has the largest amount of savings deposits; England follows, and Austria with Hungary is next; Denmark has the largest per capita average of savings—about twenty-eight dollars for each inhabitant. The United States and Switzerland have twenty-five dollars each; England, Germany and Austria have ten dollars for every inhabitant; and Italy five dollars. Holland puts little faith in savings banks, and in Russia proper there were in 1872 less than $8,000,000 of savings deposits. The only European institution that is as large as the largest American banks is the Vienna Bank, which has $100,000,000 of deposits. The deposits of the Caisse d'Epargne at Paris declined from $31,000,000 in 1871 to $8,000,000 in 1875. The Berlin Bank a monopoly—had at the close of 1874 only $4,000,000 of deposits. In England and in France the deposits are invested in Government securities; in other countries bonds and mortgages are favorite investments; but in Norway the savings banks of the country deposits are in commercial paper.—Chicago Tribune.

The President's Proclamation and the Order of the Secretary of War.

THE PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, It has been made evidently shown to me that insurrection and domestic violence exist in several counties of the State of South Carolina, and that certain combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the power vested in the marshal of the State, have been formed in said counties of said State known as "rifle clubs," who have, and often by day and by night in arms murdering some peaceable citizens and unlawfully depriving others of their liberty, without process of law, and committing other high crimes and misdemeanors, in violation of the laws of the United States and in defiance of the authority and power of the same, and whereas, in pursuance of the act of Congress of the United States that in all cases of insurrection in any State, or obstruction to the laws thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on the application of the legislature of such State, or of the Executive when the legislature cannot be convened, to call forth the militia of any other State or States, or to employ such parts of the land and naval forces as shall be judged necessary for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or causing the laws to be duly executed, and whereas the legislature of said State could not now in session, and cannot be convened in time to meet the present emergency, and the Executive of said State, under Sec. 1 of Art. 5 of the Constitution, and laws passed in pursuance thereof, has therefore made due application to me in the premises for such part of the military force of the United States as may be necessary and adequate to protect said State and the citizens thereof from domestic violence, and enforce the due execution of the laws; and,

THE PITTSBURGH HORROR.

Terrific Boiler Explosion—Several Workmen Killed and Many Others Seriously Injured.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 16.

The city was startled yesterday morning by the report which spread like wildfire that an explosion, attended with frightful loss of life and destruction of property, had taken place at one of our great mills. The story of the horrible and lifedressing occurrence was indeed a true one. A battery of boilers at Zug's mill, in the Ninth Ward, from a cause not yet satisfactorily explained, had exploded, laying in ruins a vast portion of the building, and leaving pecuniar in the ruins fully sixty human beings, many of them dead, others in the last mortal agonies, and still more suffering from injuries to a greater or less extent. The most intense excitement was created in every part of the city by the news. There were scores of people in every locality who had relations or friends among the 500 odd employes in the mills of Zug & Co., and blows were literally distributed in the direction of the scene of the dread disaster.

Directly after the explosion occurred people began to gather around the ruins, and in less than half an hour not less than 5,000 people had congregated. It looked like a pitiful picture to see the crowd when the explosion took place, with a look of dismay and horror depicted on every face, some fearing for the safety of relatives, others for their own safety, and all anxious to get away from the dangerous locality. The scene was one of indescribable confusion. Men, women and children were rushing pell-mell in every direction, and the shrieks and cries of the wounded and dying were heard above the din and confusion. Many of the workmen were blown into the air, and fell upon the roofs of adjoining buildings, the same scenes were being enacted with other sufferers, and in several houses in the vicinity all that could be done was being done to alleviate the sufferings of the dying men. As soon as possible the police and soldiers were taken to their homes when practicable, or to the West Pennsylvania Hospital, carriages for this purpose being furnished by the proprietors of the mills.

It is impossible to estimate at this time how many more of the wounded will die. Ten died during the night from their injuries, and a score of others are so frightfully injured that no hope is entertained of their recovery.

In finishing twenty-five years of official service Bishop Williams (Protestant Episcopal) of Connecticut says that within that time the applications for orders have been ordained deacons, and 170 deacons have been ordained to the priesthood, and that the number of clergy in his diocese has nearly doubled, having varied from 110 in 1851 to nearly 200 in 1876.

WHEN SCHOOL LETS OUT.

When school let out at sundown time
And shadows long on the hillside climb,
With hoop and ready and keen and shout,
To kiln and meadow and roundabout,
In merry-full frolic, through pasture grass,
A fleet score was the scholars gain
And health the finest old and brown-blood lad
Is home-glad home when school lets out.

I stand—with whittle white and shiny,
The staghorn mimosis grave below;
A little coarse gift with bold-cut bands
With how-drawn inches in white-brown hands,
Who thinks in time where deep shade lies,
With water, and locks to take home apart
I sit and watch and hope and doubt
I know not what, when school lets out.

Weigh I so small as they who know
The rifle sound—who hear from below,
Would I so small as they who pass
By grain-field vines and pasture grass
Would I, laughed in honor loud way,
And laugh and shout and romp as they?
Untight bench to roundabout,
Would I so small as they when school lets out

Some day—how soon I cannot tell
But sooner day soon I know full well
When I shall be all into time as one
The grass laid over that here do go,
And I shall be—a grad mentor
To hunter looks from like-like eyes
And here shall be—a fine-no girdle
Her head in mine—when school lets out.

ROMAN FOLK LORE.

PADRE FILIPPO, we are told, went one evening to the house where a certain Dorothea Gestaldi, who was very fond of society, was enjoying herself. Going into an empty room, he asked that the Cardinal might be sent to him, and when he entered, addressed him thus: "Your Eminence, come to this window. I have something to show you."

The Cardinal came to the window as he was desired, and looked out; but instead of the houses he saw pandemonium opened and all the souls in the flames. A great serpent was wriggling in and out among them, biting them, and in the midst was a gilt Cardinal's chair.

"Who is that for?" quoth His Eminence, who for once felt no additional fear at looking on the unpleasant.

"For you!" responded Padre Filippo.

"What must I do to escape it?" exclaimed the conscience-stricken man.

Upon which Padre Filippo read him a lecture upon penitence and amendment of life, by which it is comforting to read that he was a great success. Terribly. Had the mill been as open as an ordinary rolling mill it would have been one of the noisiest.

This day the same Padre Filippo, who is a very favorite saint with the Roman people, was walking through the streets when he saw a crowd assembled at standing round the door of a house, and, pushing his way in, found it to be the scene of a murder. After a time the hubbub lessened, and quiet was restored, when the murderer, who had been caught in the act, was brought before the tribunal of justice; and

WHEREAS, It is provided by the Constitution of the United States that the United States shall protect each of them [the States] on application of the legislature or of the Executive when the legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence; and

WHEREAS, It is provided in the laws of the United States that in all cases of insurrection in any State, or obstruction to the laws thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on the application of the legislature of such State, or of the Executive when the legislature cannot be convened, to call forth the militia of any other State or States, or to employ such parts of the land and naval forces as shall be judged necessary for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or causing the laws to be duly executed, and whereas the legislature of said State could not now in session, and cannot be convened in time to meet the present emergency, and the Executive of said State, under Sec. 1 of Art. 5 of the Constitution, and laws passed in pursuance thereof, has therefore made due application to me in the premises for such part of the military force of the United States as may be necessary and adequate to protect said State and the citizens thereof from domestic violence, and enforce the due execution of the laws; and,

WHEREAS, It is required that whenever it may be necessary in the judgment of the President to use military force for the purpose aforesaid, he shall forthwith by proclamation command such insurgents to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within a limited time.

Now, therefore, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby make proclamation and command all persons engaged in such unlawful and insurrectionary proceedings to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within three days from the issuance of this proclamation and to submit themselves to the laws and constituted authorities of said State, and I invoke the aid and co-operation of all good citizens thereof to uphold the laws and preserve the public peace.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, the fifth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six, and of the Independence of the United States one hundred and one.

This is a fair sample of many of these stories, which deal with subjects ecclesiastical, and have priests or monks for their heroes. Another and equally numerous class deals in jokes about domestic disputes. One of these, "The Bodenmeyer Queens," smacks of Shakespeare's play, "The Taming of the Shrew." There was once a queen, perhaps there have been many, whose temper made her a terror to anything but a heaven upon earth. She was young and beautiful and rich, but for obvious reasons was very unwilling to marry. She did not wish a master—not she! but her subjects made such a fussabout the matter that she was forced to give way to them at last, when she chose for her husband, a young Duke, who, however, never opened his lips, and whom she therefore concluded to be an easy-going, manageable sort of man. The matrimonial ceremony over, Her Majesty set about making her arrangements just as before, and issued invitations for a great ball, without even so much as consulting His Majesty, whom she quite intended to be, as the ancient Franks would have put it, Le roi fainant.

To all this the husband, as usual, said not a word; but a few hours before the banquet he called out to her, "Put on your traveling dress as quickly as possible; the carriage will be round immediately."

Wherenpon Her Majesty, with much scorn, declared she would do no such thing; she had to choose her evening dress for the banquet.

"If you are not ready in five minutes, when the carriage comes round, it will be the worse for you," said Monsieur the husband.

"How can I go to the country," complained the wife, "when I have invited half the world to a ball?"

"I have invited no one," said the quiet man, as quietly as ever. "And now, don't make a fuss about it, but carriage cannot long be delayed and you are ordered to go out and get ready immediately."

Her Majesty was so indeed a dozen minds about it, but she ended in just what it usually ends in—getting into the carriage ready for the journey and in traveling costume.

"You have kept me waiting," he said, "but I shall not punish you about it this time. If it occurs again you will be sorry for it."

As may be supposed, they did not set off on the best of terms with each other, and the poor wife was much offended with him the queen took no notice of him all the way, but fumbled a little dog, which she held on her knee, and talked to it all the time.

"Jump on my lap," said the husband, watching an opportunity when she was silent.

"He will not obey you," said the wife, contemptuously; "he is mine."

"I keep no one about me," said the husband as quietly as ever, "who does not obey me." And he took out his pistol and shot the dog dead, which pleased him as often before it had displeased his wife. Then he ordered the coachman to drive on, and when he heard the case stated he decided that the girl should be admitted. "And as," said the good man, "I cannot send her into any of your cells, my brothers, she is welcome to pass the night in mine, sitting in this arm-chair, wrapped up as she is, in that thick cloak." This was the very thing the countrywomen wished; so he agreed with a seeming good will, and bade her take off his boots. She was about to refuse, but thought better of it and complied. "Now," he said, "sit down in this arm-chair and I will take off yours, for my theory of the marriage state is that husband and wife should be mutually helpful to each other."—Chambers' Journal.

A Little Bad Trick.

A. J. Hoyck is a well-to-do farmer of Hunstead, Lycoming County, Md. He frequently visits the Monumental City, but up to yesterday appears not to have gained much experience from his visits. Yesterday while on a train of the Western Maryland Railroad, which he entered at Reisterstown, he formed the acquaintance of Patrick Noonan, who got on the train at the same point, and who, after a few words, proposed to buy a little bad whisky. Hoyck was willing enough to oblige Noonan, and produced a bottle of the vile stuff. Noonan drank and passed it to Hoyck, who also drank and returned the bottle to Noonan, who, after taking another drink, put the bottle in his pocket. Hoyck asked for it, but Noonan refused to give it up, and Hoyck, who had been drinking freely, became angry and struck Noonan a blow in the face. Noonan returned the blow, and a fight ensued, in which Hoyck got the worst of it. Noonan was arrested and arraigned before Justice Hoffman, who fined him $5 and costs, which he paid. Hoyck was then arrested on a charge of assault and battery, and was fined $5 and costs. He paid the fine, and then had Noonan arrested for assault and battery. Noonan was fined $5 and costs, which he paid. Hoyck was then arrested for

The War in Europe.

Those who have carefully followed the various moves made by the European from time to time since the last insurrectionary outbreak in the Eastern provinces have felt pretty thoroughly convinced that when England opposed the Berlin note the chances of peace in Europe were at an end. The terms of that note seemed to meet the wishes of the great continental powers, and to embrace the only feasible means to allay dissension in Turkey and at placing that distracted nation upon a better and more promising basis. But England through the lucy the pride, or the braggadocio of her Conservative government, laid out all the hereditary champion of the Porte, dispatched a tremendous iron-clad fleet to Besika Bay, strengthening her Admiralty at Malta and Gibraltar, and held out a menace which was not to be mistaken by the shrewd statesmen at the head of affairs in Russia, Austria and Germany. Now that the war cloud has really gathered, and the roll of its drum is heard along the Russian frontier, it remains to be seen whether this power which has virtuously precipitated a general war will be able and willing to set up to the sounding brass of a foolish and short-sighted ministry. At this moment England stands upon the brink of a dilemma. Lord Beaconsfield (Disraeli) and his colleagues have virtually pledged her support to the Turk; the country, led by John Bright and other cautious statesmen, expresses the deepest sympathy with the oppressed Christians of Turkey, and feels disposed to permit Russia to do as she thinks best. Mr Bright who in 1854 bitterly opposed the Crimean war, stands up at Manchester and vituperates, after an allied experience of twenty two years, the arguments made against that useless struggle. He then held that war to be unjustice and unjust. He now points to the fact that half a million of lives were sacrificed and a hundred millions of money spent by England. All that was gained by that war was the limiting of the Russian fleet in the Black Sea, and the abolition of her protectorate over the Christian subjects of the Porte. The first of these clauses has been practically ignored by Russia, and the protection of the continent powers has been a failure. Not one of those powers has supplied the protection which Russia gave these Christians before the war. In the opinion of Mr. Bright the English people have learned that a Turkish alliance is a useless sham — "it is not easy, he says, "to know exactly what to do about the treaty of 1856. We might tear the treaty into a thousand pieces, and say we were free. We might in that case leave Turkey to her fate." During the negotiations of the past few months the government has been going upon old lines. It has leant on Turk all through, and the language of itself has emulated the hard language of the old forces which adorn the back of the English people have been in sympathy. Says the Marquis of Bath in a recent speech. "If the alternative lay between leaving the provinces of Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria at the mercy of the Turk, or letting Russia take them, let Russia have them, and God be with her." While Mr Bright is preaching peace, and the government and the members of Parliament are busy at their shooting boxes, Russia has declared herself ready and the decisive moment has come. It is for England now to say what she will do. In honor she is pledged to Turkey, she can only preserve honorability at the sacrifice of national reputation now, and perhaps forever. It can fight she may possible have to face, as she did in the days of her greatness, the combined armies of Europe.

"The position of political authority" says Mr. Freeman in his "History of the Conquest of the Saracens," "to which even the best Mahometan governments must condemn its non-Mahometan subjects is aggravated by the intern cruelty and faithlessness of the Ottoman character into that reign of terror against which Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria have risen. They have risen, not to reform the rule of the Turk, but to free the land which is theirs, and not his, from his forceful presence." Ever since the breaking out of the insurrection in Herzegovina it has been evident that Russia has calmly bided her time. For years the gravitation of the Russian empire southward has been a problem dear to the hearts of her statesmen. Constantinople and Moscow under the same government has been the secret aim of the Russian throne and the people. Behind the Montenegrin and Servian insurrections has stood the power of the Czar, pulling the wires and urging on to renewed efforts. All this time Russia has gradually increased her troops, officers and men have formed, advances gained, fighting stores by selling to the foreigner troops. Russia has some immense numerical strength. The grand total of her population is 85,000,000, out of which about as large an army in the field as had any other European nation in the world. Her military organization is superb. Russia Poland stands like a grand fortress between Austria and Germany. Her armies could be launched upon Europe in a very few hours, while the approaches to her own territory are fortified at every point. From the Black Sea her navy could sweep down upon the Mediterranean. The mobilization of her army commenced some weeks ago. To lay her troops across the Turkish frontier. She has entered Persia, Wallachia, and the minor powers upon her side, and the hour has come when Turkey must answer to her as she sweeps like an avenging spirit upon the once fair land now reeking with the impurity of ten thousand crimes with deeds which have made humanity hang its head.

The friendly relations between Russia and Austria lead to the supposition that on the assumption that power will remain neutral. Italy will act in her national interest. France proclaims a strict neutrality. What Germany will do it is impossible to foresee. That Bismarck will follow the wishes of the London Times and usher upon the struggle at once is unlikely. The chances to date he will await the turn of events, and step in when it becomes certain that Germany alone has the power to curb the belligerents. One thing is evident the longer the struggle for strength last arrest. When it does it will end in beyond the power of man to arrest.

"Change" that Tilden Will Make.

Have those who propose to vote for Tilden on the ground that "a change" is the management of the Government more carefully pondered over and asked themselves: What will Mr. Tilden's political associates and what will he do about offices? A few facts may throw some light on this question. Mr. Tilden is seventy-six years of age, and has been in political career as long ago as 1844, in defense of the doctrine of States Rights and State Sovereignty. He was then in that school of politicians which was known as the Albany Regency, in which Van Buren and Marcy and the other leaders of the Democracy of politics, were leaders. Van Buren was the predecessor of Mr. Tilden, as gov. From that day to the present, as an intimate or one of the other of the associates Mr. Tilden has flourished and flourished as a politician. Tammany Hall has been conspicuous in its corruptions and robberies and the frauds which have ruined New York politics during have been "thirty years Democrats." Nationally Mr. Tilden's work for the Government of the Confederate States, and for the Democratic Party. Nor is this the only record of the change proposed. Mr. Tilden and Tammany Hall at the South. He was the candidate of the Democracy in the disputed election of 1876, and for compensation for the obstruction of the counting of the votes in the Southern States. The combination of Tammany Hall and the bogus electors in the Southern States are to have the electoral millions of the Democracy, which they are not entitled to, but which is common. The election of Tilden will transfer the agents of these frauds to the Senate and Representation from those States, to Washington, from Tammany Hall with the Democratic majority in the Senate. Then will come a National democratic Convention which has never been assembled. A simple majority vote in each House of Congress can vote the whole of the returns, and can vote the additional electorates and bonds with which to pay them. The New York practice of bribery—the plunder sapping $100,000,000 for each regular vote in Congress—will be inaugurated on a magnificent scale. Money will be divided by the barrel. The public school and bank association will sink by comparison into contempt. The whole Government, in all its departments, will become a den of plunderers such as has never disgraced any nation at any time. Two thousand millionaires, backed by the Solid South and Tammany Hall, both self-created by the capital and the Government, will be the perpetual crimes of New York for a quarter of a century. This will be a change, but it is the change for which men at the North who are to be under such a Government, and who are to pay the taxes to meet these claims, desire to bring about?

Does any portion of the people of the North, who complain that during the last few years there have been some cases of official dishonesty which have been exposed and punished, desire to transfer Tilden and Tammany Hall from New York to Washington, there to meet and unite with the Solid South, and with Allen Thurman as Democratic Congress, Cabinet and President that the distribution of $2,000,000,000 of greenbacks and bonds? One of the great complaints has been that for sixteen years the Democrats have had no share in handling the vast sums of money incidental to the expenditure of a long war and the management of a public debt. Deaths from Fright.

THE first King of Prussia, Frederick I., was sleeping quietly in an armchair, when his wife, Louisa of Mecklenburg, who had fallen into a state of hopeless insanity, having escaped from her keepers, succeeded in gaining admittance to her husband's apartments, and after wounding herself in her efforts to break through a glass door, cast herself upon her husband in a state of furious delirium. The shock of finding whom her mainly had been carefully concealed, was so terrified at the aspect of this woman covered with blood, and clad only in some long garments, that he imagined he saw before him the "White Lady," whose appearance, according to an ancient tradition, invariably announced the death of a Prince of the house of Brandenburgh. He was at that instant in the act of [illegible] and the animal speedily dispatched and taken aboard. It weighed over 300 pounds.

From the West.

The following interesting letter (or an extract,) from Capt. W. Clifford to his brother W C. Newman, of this place, interesting:

I cannot take upon myself to answer your last letters because I destroyed all of my papers except the daily journal. That I kept, and at one time, when we attempted to cross the Yellowstone (and failed) I sealed that up, burnt all of yours and Ila letters, Eddies among the rest, and wrote what I supposed to be my last letter. Those of us who realized the situation did not expect ever to re-cross the river again. All day long from seven o'clock a. m., until five p. m. the Infantry lay on the river bank waiting for the cavalry to cross their horses. A herd of buffaloes at one time started in on the opposite side of the river and swam through the line of horses, stampeding many of them. To one who, as you know, have spent a great portion of my life on the water, it seemed as though the cavalry did not care particularly about crossing. Though with the meagre means at our disposal, it was a difficult and hazardous under taking, and I may have mistaken awkwardness and inexperience for disinclination. At from p. m. one of the four companies of cavalry was across, less six horses which had been drowned. Then Gen. Gibbon ordered the movement abandoned, and at five we return ed to our camp, none of us, to tell the truth, sorry. You may wonder why, I will tell you. Lieut. Bradley, of the 7th Infantry, had reconnitered the Indian village on Tounge river and reported from 200 to 600 lodges. Our Crow scouts declared that there were not less than 1,000 fighting men in the village, and that they were anxious to lure us across the river. While the attempt to cross was being made the Sioux were running buffalo not more than a mile and a half from the crossing party, in plain sight of the advance guard, when they dared to "come on." Their plan was to get us down into the valley of the Rosebud, only six miles distant, and then dispose of us as they afterward did of Custer and his brave fellows. This they would have attempted with something of a show of success, as the valley is peculiarly adapted for ambuscade, being cut up by deep vertical sides ravines, strown with fallen timber. On the borders of the stream a dense growth of underbrush and places where bluffs on either side almost meet. What better place could they have selected? For all this I do not now think that our little army of 292 men would have fallen as easy prey to the blood-thirsty wretches as did Custer's That is where the Infantry skirmish practice comes in. There would no doubt have been a desperate fight, as they would have been on all sides of us, and knowing every inch of the ground, the warriors outnumbering as three to to one, with those devils of squaws as auxiliaries, (They are fully as savage as the men.) We would have been in a tight place, and forced at last to retreat, leaving our dead.

This is the conclusion aimed at by the light of later events, after we had marched over the same ground, reinforced by the 5th, 6th and 22d Infantries, and what was left of the 7th cavalry after their memorable battle. The village here, before its junction with those on the Little Big Horn, and the Big Horn, must have numbered not less than 700 lodges with at least 1,500 warriors. The ground was in the prowess of the whites and the effectiveness of the long range rifles of the Infantry. During the entire summer they have proved themselves as scouts worthy of the highest trust, and I cannot remember where or where they made a mistake. I am sorry enough that active opperations have closed for the winter for almost anything is preferable to this life of inactivity. However I suppose that we will have another taste of it next summer. Certain it is that the Montana column worked hard enough to destroy all the Sioux in the country, having marched since the 17th of last march nearly 1,- 800 miles often suffering for water night after night in the driving rain without tents as with but one blanket, and it is a fact that when we were the most scantily supplied with shelter the rain fell most continually. Two of our men died of exposure and hardship, six are away at Buford sick. A very small percentage you will allow, all things considered. For the rest there is not one of them on sick report as a result of the campaign. So the comfort is that if we have no brilliant victories to proclaim, we have no slaughtered dead to mourn. That we did not meet the enemy was not our fault. Certain it is that we worked hard enough to meet four or five of him.

All Sorts.

Kerosene is up to forty cents a gallon and it belongs to look as though it would cost something to blow up an old stove and a hired girl, this winter.

In the polite circles of Morocco the word "stealth" is not used. But the grim old monster is slow to take a hint, and comes prowling around just as in other places.

Cabinets, tying posts, and "all purpose rials for performing Her exposing spiritual manifestations," are advertised by a Washington manufacturer.

John Brown, Queen Victoria's own man, has had a comic song written about him in London. John is finding out the penalty of greatness, but his sole goes marching on.

The population of our country is not half what it should be. Here thousands and thousands of barrels of cider are going to waste this year, for want of somebody to drink it.

Jennie June thinks, a knowledge of cooking is what the poor need most. We don't like to dispute with a lady but it seems to us that something to cook might be fully as necessary, though so may be wrong.

The Mikado of Japan now wears appears, except at great festivities, in Europran garb and his whiskers get bal der which the olive oval of his face and his long eyes must look quaint indeed.

Twenty two thousand persons visited the Zoological Gardens in Philadelphia last Sunday. The crowd was so orderly and decent as that which frequents the Exposition building.

"Ladies an gentlemen," said an Irish manager to his audience of three, "as there is nobody here, I'll dismiss you all, the performance of this night will not be performed, but will be repeated to morrow evening.

A waiter advertising for a situation says he can "polish apkins 200 different ways," but what the boarding community want most just now is a waiter who can carry a dish of soup without soaking the first joint of his thumb in it.

"Great physicians may die," once remarked a wise French doctor; "but there are ever three greater than the greatest and better than the best who minister with suffering humanity. And they are Water, Exercise and Diet."

The rush of Centennial pilgrims to Mount Vernon has so enriched the association as to enable it to, pay all its debts and to leave besides a handsome sum for the further improvement of the grounds and surroundings.

The heirs of William Penn still receive from the British Government $80,000 a year in compensation for their proprietary rights to Pennsylvania. The British Government always keeps its contracts regardless of any exigency.

The latest, simplest and most effectual sores-trap yet thought of is an earthen wash bowl nearly half filled with water, covered over with meal, and placed on the pantry shelf. A Pulaski, N. Y., women recently caught half a dozen of the mischief makers in one night by this method.

The editor of a county paper wrote one evening: "To-day is the anniversary of the death of Louis Phillippe." When the printer's proof came up the name read "Sam Phillips." The editor wrote on the margin, "Who the deuce is Sam Phillips?" Next morning the article read "To-day is the anniversary of the death of Sam Phillips. Who the deuce is Sam Phillips?"

A recent writer observes: "It is curious and possibly a little disheartening to think how terribly a journalist may toil and yet leave behind him hardly and mourner to his fidelity and industry." They are so busy making records for others that they have no time to think of their own monuments.

Speaking of the late election in Ohio the Chicago Tribune says that something less than half of the German vote was cast for the Republican ticket. Last year two-thirds of it was given for Gov. Hayes on account of the prevailing German opposition to rag-baby inflation. But as that issue was not prominent in the late Ohio campaign, many of the Ohio Germans, correct off by the delusive, humbug cry of Tilden and Reform, voted the Democratic ticket, who supported Hayes against Bill Allen last year; but this defection was more than made good by the American Republican Greenbackers that had voted the ragbaby ticken last year returning to their own party this fall.

PLAIN and COLORED WORK

This is not only an exciting but a very interesting political campaign. Women as well as men, take a lively interest in their country, and they should not shrink from it. They cannot vote or appear in procession, but they can cut the wood and bring up the coal, and thus leave the men more time to talk up matters.

A Kansas orator talks in this strain: "Where is Europe with America? Nowhere! Where is great Britain? Nowhere! They call Britain the mistress of the sea, but what makes the sea? The Mississippi river makes it, and all we've got to do it to turn the Mississippi river into the Mammoth Cave and the British navy will be floundering to the mud."

—Last Saturday morning one of the officials at the Capitol in Richmond, saw a middle-aged, frowzel headed man, with a bag on his shoulder, walking through the square toward Monument Jackson statue. Arrived before it, he threw his bag aside, wiped his face, and knelt, and was soon evidently deep in prayer. When he arose and was questioned as to his proceedings, he said: "It's on my account, and I thought as I was passing I would stop and call a prayer for him."

A man who unexpectedly overthrew both plans in Paris lately, on their arrival at the passing through Chicago one day, was surprised when the train came on one day light again, it was found that there was one more passenger than when it entered the tunnel, and the new arrival was supposed had stolen ticket, baggage, or even clothing of any description. The youthful dead head, however, was carried through to Jersey City.

Whatever else may be said of the Order of Patrons of husbandry, they must at least be conceded the credit of having set in motion a new element of sociability among the farmers. Many of the Grange headquarters have been virtually transformed into club rooms and some of them have been supplied with libraries, and they are habitually frequented by all the members entitled to their privileges.

John L. Routt, who served his apprenticeship as Governor of Colorado when it was a territory, and has now been chosen, to preside over the state, began life as a carpenter, and when he married, at 18, a girl wife, they only had $20 in money and a few clothes suited to their station. Now Routt is small in stature, falling below the medium height, compact, and very steady liver. The St. Louis Globe Democrat unadvisedly says: "He is a perfect Chesterfield in politeness, being very courteous and affable."

When fifty or one hundred Centennial visitors accumulate in the anteroom of the White House they are permitted to go in a body to see the President. He has always received his countless callers without complaint, but since his latest return to Washington he is said to wear a more good-humored air, and the shake of the hand is more cordial. He receives his business and official calls but once those of the Centennial visitors, who are admitted every ten or fifteen minutes.

An observatory is to be built on the American side at Niagara to enable visitors to view the cataract without dressing in waterproof suits. It will be 100 feet long 24 feet wide, and will extend from the foot of Prospect Point on level railway to the entrance of the Shadow of the Rock. It will be constructed of stone and iron, and at the end facing the Falls there will be a parlor with large windows. The tour through the Shadow of the Rock, as made by the unsophisticated during the past summer, has been a delusion and a snare. The observatory will be a very sensible improvement.

Sullivan, the Chicago murderer of a school teacher, has been released on bail after the jury in his case failed to agree. There were eleven jurors for acquittal and one for conviction. The eleven shouted and battled the one in a shameful manner, even threatening his life, for he stood his ground. This unparalleled crime against law and the freedom of conscience was virtually approved by the presiding judge, one McAllister. He believed throughout the trial more as a leading counsel for the criminal than as an impartial judge. Public sentiment is solid against this unworthy magistrate. A petition of 1,200 members of the board of trade will be presented for removal. Such a petition could be carried on under a judge who rules continually on the side of the accused, and who publicly says that Sullivan is not guilty of murder,—the very issue to be tried! McAllister, as might be expected, is a "reform" democrat, elected by the party which is going to purify American politics.

The Centennial exhibition closes on Friday next. It will, as a general gathering, be ranked with the nation's day. Men of the eastern and middle States will be the principle actors here and gatherers of their people at the Centennial on Friday. Of course Pennsylvania will contribute them, swelling up 250,000. New York came next, with 125,000. The total number of visitors will reach nearly 2,000,000, and the exhibitors will put all its expenses and divide something among the original stockholders. It was a stupid oversight in the grand jury not to find in the managers to the jury voted to close on near the day of adjournment.

Grateful Thousands proclaim BENEDICT HILTZ'S the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and final organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark colored usual matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy function of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fortified.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Tumors, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuge, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

INGERSOLL IN CHICAGO.

The Largest Political Gathering Ever Seen in that City.

(From the Inter-Ocean, Oct. 23.)

The Republican mass meeting which filled the Inclosure last night was the grandest outpouring of the people that the country has ever seen. It was the real people. An hour before the doors were opened thousands and thousands were massed on all sides of the building, while a solid column 25 miles long extended from Lincoln avenue and Fifty-second street to the Exposition building, and still it kept later the thronging in crowds that at 7:30 o'clock the doors were opened and the crowd was massed from side to side of the building. Every man who came was covered with rosettes, ribbons, badges, and torches. Every man had a badge, a ribbon, or a torch. Every man was a Republican, and it seems, with all sincerity, that the Democratic party has not found a single solitary man to support it. Every man was for Hayes and Wheeler, for honest money, for the protection of American labor, for the full and free recognition of the rights of the colored citizens, for the suppression of the Ku-Klux, for the punishment of the murderers of Louisiana and Mississippi, for the full and free recognition of the equal rights of all men before the law, for the preservation of the results of the war, for the payment of the debt created by the war, for the suppression of the Democratic party, and for the defeat of Samuel J. Tilden. Every man was a Republican, and every man was a Union man. The Democratic party has not found a single solitary man to support it. Every man was for Hayes and Wheeler, for honest money, for the protection of American labor

INGERSOLL IN CHICAGO.

The Largest Political Gathering Ever Seen in that City.

Chicago Inter-Ocean, Oct. 26.]

Republican mass meeting which Col. Ellis Instead addressed Saturday night was the grandest outpouring of the entire county has ever seen. It was the largest political meeting ever held in Chicago, and thousands of people, all eager to hear the speech of the Republican orator, filled the streets and surrounded Republican headquarters. So crowded did the sidewalks and street become that the police found it impossible to keep the throng back in order, and the crowd soon overflowed into the middle of the street. Every window and every point of vantage in the buildings in the vicinity was occupied with people, and even the roofs were covered with men and women, all eager to hear the speech of the evening. It is impossible to estimate the number of people who were present, but it is safe to say that it was not less than 25,000. The meeting was held in front of the Republican headquarters, on the corner of Clark and Madison streets, and the platform was erected on the balcony of the building. Long before the hour set for the meeting to begin the streets were filled with a dense mass of humanity, and the enthusiasm displayed by the masses and the constant cheering of the multitude left no doubt in the minds of those who were present as to the political complexion of the meeting. Every allusion to the Democratic party was greeted with hisses and groans, and the mention of the name of Republican candidates was the signal for a storm of applause. Among the distinguished persons who occupied seats on the platform were Gen. Logan, Gen. Hurlbut, Gen. Fairchild, Gen. Torrence, Col. Ellis Instead, Col. Bryan, Col. Mason, Col. Ingersoll, Col. Bradley, Col. Wheeler, Col. Rhodes, Col. Mann, Col. Hamilton, Col. Hall, Col. Hamilton, Col. Hall, Col. Hamilton, Col. Hall

"SOMETHING ROTTEN IN DENMARK."

Will O. D. Rise and Explain the Discrepancy in the Norwood Canvass.

The returns from Norwood, the capital and chief residence of the great high muck-a-muck who has held the noses of the people of Charlevoix county and forced down their throats a dose of his own compounding, show 2 votes for Dixon, 7 for Sec and 16 for Harris. Following is an affidavit of four reliable men which proves beyond a doubt that the ballots of that town were tampered with.

State of Michigan, } ss.
County of Charlevoix, }

On this eighth day of November, A. D. 1876, before me a Justice of the Peace for the Township of Norwood personally came Wm. H. Remsen, Lucius H. Pearl, Parker McIntyre and Wm. Harris, who severally being sworn in due form according to law, depose and say, that on Tuesday, the seventh day of November, A. D., 1876, at the general election held on that day in the village of Norwood, Charlevoix county and State of Michigan, did then and there each cast of his vote for John S. Dixon for the office of County Clerk and Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county.

Wm. H. REMSEN,
PARKER McINTYRE,
LUCIUS H. PEARL,
Wm. HARRIS.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this eighth day of November, 1876.

T. SUTHERLAND, Justice of the Peace.

If can be easily proven, and probably will be that three other persons voted for Mr. Dixon and the testimony of all these persons is meant to involve also votes for Sec and Harris, the name of Dixon being taken because the smallest number of votes were cast for that gentleman. We wish to charge no one with fraud at the ballot box but we wish to assert that Mr. Dixon has been unlawfully deprived of votes, and both Sec and Harris of the same number as Dixon.

PERSONAL.—O. F. Washburn and family left town Thursday for a visit to friends in Wisconsin.

JAMES A. Cameron formerly of this place arrived here from Canada on Thursday, and will remain.

THE Chicago Times reports the Schooner W. J. Smith in that port loaded with potatoes and turnips.

A Card.

To my many friends throughout the county who have so generously supported me in the canvass just closed, I take this method of returning my thanks. My election, under the circumstances I have considered from the start almost hopeless, but be assured I feel no less under obligations to you than I would had the result been different.

WM. HARRIS,
Norwood, Nov. 14, 1876.

We would not be presumptious enough to question the wisdom of the School Board as evinced by this action, but we cannot ignore the fact that this society is a potent auxiliary of the school itself, and should receive encouragement rather than obstacles of this nature.

DISTRESSING OCCURRENCE.—The Idaho coming up brings the news of the frightful death of Capt. Paul Paley of the Tug Bennett, and four others, on the North shore, one day this week. The Bennett was towing a vessel into Pomfretts harbor and when near the harbor a fair wind springing up, she let go the vessel, and in coming around got ashore on a reef. They labored to get her off until exhausted, and went into a room off the engine room and went to sleep. While they were asleep the governor of the engine, or something of the kind gave way, flooding the room with steam, suffocating them to death. Capt. Paley was an old pilot on the lakes and is well known. One of the men was a son of Mr. Newton of St. Helens.

HARBOR MATTERS.—We have assurances from Senator Perry and Representative Hubbell that they will give the Charlevoix harbor improvement question their prompt attention on their arrival at Washington. They will do all in their power to have work commenced in the Spring.

THE ELECTION.

Michigan 25,000 Republican.

Hubbell's Majority 5,550

Williams' Majority 1,500

Michigan has preserved her high prestige, and has rolled up a majority not less than 25,000. We have elected eight out of nine Congressmen. The Senate is Republican by three to one, and the House by two to one.

Hubbell's majority will approximate 5,500 at least. He received 1,700 majority in the upper Peninsula. In Grand Traverse he ran largely ahead of his ticket.

Williams has a round 1500 majority.

Steele is elected by a majority, but the figures we are unable to give.

THE COUNTY.

Charlevoix County has done nobly and the young Democracy are unhappy. The following are the majorities on the electoral, State Congressional Senatorial, and Legislative:

Hayes, 411; Tilden, 205; majority for Hayes 206

Croswell, 410, Webber 202; majority for Croswell, 208.

Hubbell, 415; Kilbourne, 199; Hubbell's majority, 216.

Williams, 377; Rose 235; majority for Williams, 142

Steele, 409; Hill, 205; majority for Steele, 204.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

McLeod 282; Beers, 66; Sec, 350; plurality for McLeod, 93.

Hipp, 160; Eaton, 231; Harris 216; plurality for Eaton, 5.

The returns show the election of Upright Clerk and Register by about 60 majority over Bartholomew, who received 178 votes. Dixon received 128.

GOOD TEMPLARS.—The following are the officers of the Charlevoix, Good Templars Lodge for the new quarter:

W. C. T.—J. Milo Eaton,
W. V. T.—Mrs Ja Ingalls
W. Sec'y.—Geo. W. Crotter.

W. Chaplain.—W. L. Tilden.
W. M.—Henry Cooper.
W. D. M.—Mary Mason.
W. A. S.—Kate Johnson
W. F. S.—O. B Weed.
W. I. G.—Ida Mason.
W. O. G.—Chester See.
R. H. S.—Bessie Dougherty.
L. H. S.—Kate Carpenter.

The Lodge is in a prosperous condition.

As an earnest of the SENTINEL'S desire for the best men in county offices, it expresses the hope that, with the memory of the turbulent canvass just closed indelibly stamped upon their minds, the people of this county will harmoniously unite hereafter, or until time shall change the present political status of affairs, in selecting good men from both parties. The Republican party of the county in its first attempt at independence polluted its own nest, and a clear party vote has rebuked the offense. The Republican majority in the county exceeds the entire Democratic vote, but we are willing that the Democracy should have a voice in the administration of county affairs. This is the position the SENTINEL has always taken.

THE success of Gen. Butler in the Seventh Congress District of Massachusetts, was a signal victory, when it is considered how earnest and bitter was the opposition to him, and he certainly has every reason to feel proud of the results. On the other hand the negro 1,995 votes received by Mr. Hoar ought to convince him that he is not appreciated by the Republicans of the district, or else that they are not the men to quietly permit any one to call in question the wisdom or expediency of their deliberate choice of a candidate, which was done by Mr. Hoar. This triumph of Butler will give him increase of confidence, and in Congress he will be more decidedly a leader of the Republican side than heretofore.

HOPELESS.—We are sorry to learn that the case of W. H. Carr, who went to New Brunswick last summer owing to a sadly impaired mind, is hopeless. Private treatment has no effect, and he has been placed in an asylum.

The Sentinel

WHO IS PRESIDENT?

Both Parties Claim the Election.

Everything Looks Favorable for Hayes.

Our dispatches last week warranted us in claiming the election of Hayes and Wheeler by one majority in the Electoral College. But the Democratic papers have claimed and still claim the election of Tilden. The result depends upon Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina, which have been all conceded by the Republicans. The latest advices we have confirm the reports that South Carolina and Florida are Republican beyond a doubt, and that the Republicans have good reason to believe that Louisiana is also Republican. Leading men of both parties have gone South to see that a fair count is secured. The New York Times confidently assert that Hayes and Wheeler are elected. Secretaries Chandler and Morrill claim that they are elected, and the latter has telegraphed the fact to the Rothschilds. From the present aspect of affairs we are justified in saying that Uncle Sammy is not elected yet.

LATER.

A dispatch received states that South Carolina and Florida are positively Republican, and that the Democratic papers of Chicago and other cities have given up Louisiana.

We call particular attention to our stock of blankets in scarlet and blue, Mackinac, white, gray, horse blankets etc, at Fox, Rose & Buttars'.

From Petoskey.

EDITOR SENTINEL.—Will you favor us by inserting in your paper the accompanying brief note which the Democrat of this place refused to print.

We are sorry to be obliged to ask such a favor; but since the editor of the Democrat has taken advantage of his position as editor of the only paper in the place, to malign the character of our Lodge of Good Templars, and thus refuses to redress the injury, our Lodge has no other alternative, if it would be heard in the matter, which justice demands it should.

W. W. VANAKEN,
MRS. J. MCNEAL,
E. C. CAMPBELL,
PETOSKEY, Oct. 26, 1876

EDITOR DEMOCRAT.—In your last issue, you took the liberty to speak of our Lodge of Good Templars in a manner so uncalled for and, in the judgment of the Lodge, in a spirit so unjust as to occasion it to appoint us a committee to reply to your article, and ask you to insert the same in your paper.

Whether your action be on account of the act of the Lodge towards you, when a member of it, or because of personal hatred towards one of its members we know not. If for the former reason you certainly are cherishing an ill will that will surely militate against you without anything more than a momentary agony to the Lodge since that act of the Lodge is only the performance of a duty made imperative by its rules and your own works. If however because of the latter reason, you should remember that the other fifty seven members are PRO-concerned about your personal affairs, and hold it as quiet unbecoming any gentleman to thus misrepresent them.

For that you did misrepresent them in your statement about the condition and workings of their affairs, and that too, in a very unprovoked manner, is susceptible of easy proof.

In our judgment you are ill adapted as an editor, to thus begin a crusade upon our Lodge and its members, and will find their favor to you, both peculiarly and otherwise, of quite as great value as yours to them. Accordingly, we ask you as a gentleman and as you value your reputation for truth, to retract the charges so wrongfully made against our Lodge in your issue of October 20.

W. W. VANAKEN,
MRS. J. MCNEAL,
E. C. CAMPBELL,

We have opened our fall and winter stock of goods. You can find any article you want and prices always the lowest, at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

THE Lake Avenue Street Railway Company of Detroit, having obtained permission of the Common Council to extend their track from the Junction Depot through Larned street to the Michigan Central depot, arrival company, on the 28th applied to the Superior Court for an injunction to restrain the company from laying the track, but not on officer of the road could be found on whom to serve it. At eleven o'clock on that night a full force of men, horses and plows, dant material among from the rails on Larned street, and commenced to build the extension. The injunction was read, disregarded, and the work progressed until Saturday afternoon, when the hands and teams of the opposing fire-wire driven out by the pair of the road. There was a crowd of thousands swarming on the street, and sympathizing with the extension, and a final tumult, when the police appeared, carried the dispatches from the rival lines by prison, and the work went on and was completed promptly at midnight, with a car over the route and full possession.

A FEW days ago Hon. Byron Reeves, a farmer living on section 2, Ypsilanti township, left home on some business, and while absent his wife, in an hour, struck her with a chair, upon which she fell. He then went toward a neighbor's, where he called a man out and shot him in the back of the head with a charge of shot. The man fell, but soon recovered sufficiently to get into the house, and, locking out, saw his assailant reloading his gun, and, drawing a revolver, fired at him, but missed him, and he succeeded in getting away. A neighbor heard the gun, and, looking out, saw the woman fall, and hastened to her aid, and, as soon as possible, sent for the neighbors with a view to arrest Reeves, but before they arrived he had loaded his gun and put it in his chest and fixed it off, cutting off his chin and a side of his nose. He then went to the house, broke down a window, took off his coat, and, placing the muzzle will under his chin, pulled the trigger with his toe. The discharge tore his neck, right face and head all to pieces. When the officers got there he was a case for the Coroner. It is thought Mrs. Reeve may recover.

IN the southern counties of Michigan are several settlements of respectable Indians who, although entirely civilized, still live in very poor. Four Methodist preachers are laboring in his region, all of whom are Indians. One of them owns a farm of industrial estate of fifty dollars a year, out of which he pays his own expenses and clothes himself. The others are said to find work to talk of money, but receive no pay, of books and books in the language of the people among whom they labor. The Indians have a good appetite for books in the Chippewa or Ottawa dialect.

Epizootic.

THIS word is in common use and applied generally to a particular disease which has been occasionally prevalent in various parts of the country, but the Scientific Farmer truthfully says that there seems to be amongst the community an oddbut wide-spread misapprehension regarding the significance of this word. "Epizootic," so that it is now commonly considered to describe and define a certain disease amongst horses, while its real significance is entirely lost sight of; hardly a week passes that we are not asked to look at a horse which the owner thinks must have the "epizootic." It really denotes the prevalence of any one disease amongst animals, corresponding to an epidemic amongst people, thus there may be an epizootic of pleuro-pneumonia amongst cows, of cholera amongst hogs, of abortion amongst ewes, or of influenza amongst horses, just as there may be an epidemic of small-pox, measles or scarlet fever amongst humans. The disease with which our horses have so generally been affected at two different periods within the past four years is, then, influenza or catarrhal fever, commonly lost sight of; hardly are again approaching the fall of the year at which time this disease has heretofore made its general and remarkable appearance, a little about the histories of similar outbreaks in this and other countries and the general causes of influenza may not be uninteresting or inopportune. It has a very early history. In 1299 it appeared in Seville, where "it killed more than one thousand horses, and seemed to be incurable." In 1648 it broke out amongst the horses of the French army in thermos. The loss it was very prevalent over the whole of Europe, affecting both men and horses; in 1699 Europe and America suffered from the disease, and again in 1732, in 1767 it once more appeared in both hamispheres, when it is recorded that both horses and dogs suffered from it. "In 1776, after a very severe winter and warm summer, influenza sprezatiren Europe, attacking horses and dogs first and human beings after. Poultry died in great numbers; it was very severe in New York and caused great mortality amongst the hares of Maryland." During the present century it has raged with varying degrees of virulence; in 1810-30 and 1865-4 and 1871-2 in London, and in 1872-3 in this country, when it broke out in Toronto, Canada, on the 4, 1872. In nine days it had attacked nearly all the horses in the city. On Dec. 13 it reached Montreal, on the 14th, Buffalo; 17th, Rochester; 23d, Boston, New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City; 27th, Philadelphia; 30th, Washington; and again in October, 1876, there was an outbreak which, however, was much less intense and wide-spread than the one of '72 just referred to. It is singularly prevalent in some years and although it will exhibit general characteristics in common, yet the epizootic of one year will be marked by some particular symptom or symptoms which will be entirely wanting in the outbreak of the following year. Heroes of large cities and crowded towns are more obnoxious to it than those of the country; and in the country those are most liable to it that are the most confined. The attack is attended with great and early loss of strength, and with early inflammation of the membrane lining the nose and throat, and the digestive organs are irritable.—Rural New Yorker.

Romance of a Twelve O'Clock Man.

RESIDENTS of Brooklyn in the vicinity of the City Hall have been much interested for several years in the regular appearance a few minutes before twelve o'clock every day of a man upon the steps of the City Hall as the clock strike twelve, and then disappears until the next day. This practice he has steadily continued, rain or shine, for seven years, until he is known by the sobriquet of the "Twelve o'clock man." His name is Thomas Conner, and various attempts have been made to connect him with romantic love stories, blighted affections, disappointment in marriage, lost property, etc., but they are simply basis. The man is a monomaniac upon the subject of a city job, and what brings him daily to the City Hall was a promise made to him seven years ago by a politician that if he would meet him at the City Hall at twelve o'clock he would procure him a job. Since then he has put in an appearance regularly at the appointed hour, and his manla seems to exhaust itself as soon as twelve o'clock is past. After that he is sane enough, and seeks odd jobs—raising coal, carrying out rubbish, sweeping streets, etc. He rejects charity with scorn. He lives in a shanty with his only sister, and though they are far from living in luxury, they enjoy a moderate amount of comfort. Men may come and women may go, but the twelve o'clock man at the City Hall is an established fact.—N. Y. Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Mushrooms and Toadstools.

IN an article on "Mushrooms as a Poison," suggested by the recent death of three persons in one family from eating toadstools, the Newcastle Daily Advertiser says:

"The lamentable cases of death by eating poisonous mushrooms in Ouhu have created considerable excitement, and a justifiable prejudice has arisen against the excellent whose esperanza charms have long been the delight of gourmands. This prejudice promises to result in the almost total banishment of one of the most delicious and delicate vegetables from the table a relish which possesses so many distinctions and qualities. Butter, save asterfo milius, starve upon beefsteak a la mush, than the item liffer a la toadstool.

"If mushrooms there are estimated to be almost five thousand varieties, of which the kinds known to medical Latinity as agaricus campestris and coprinatus are most commonly eaten. There are perhaps a half dozen other species this which are edible, but there are not more than a dozen altogether. The proportion of twelve to five thousand is sufficiently small to make the selection of the dozen rather precipitous. Taking the twelve from the five thousand, the varieties which are all poisonous, and one variety of which alone produced the deaths at Union. A peculiarity of the mushroom is that the varieties considered edible here are rejected in other countries as poisonous, and those rejected here are eaten there with impunity. Another idiosyncrasy is that they are poisonous at one time and edible at another. But perhaps the queerest thing about the mushroom is that the variety which one man may eat with gust, and digest without difficulty, is noxious to another. To sum up the matter, mushrooms are distinctly untrustworthy as their low class in the vegetable kingdom would lead one to suspect.

"Since the rejection of mushrooms is preferable to any number of sanitary measures. Unless the mushrooms are cultivated for market they are not to be trusted. They are doubtful food at best, and we hope the Union cases will be a warning against the eating of them, as well as other dangerous products of the same kind. The recent fatalities are not the only ones of the kind that have occurred lately, and we feel justified in advising the abolition of mushrooms as a table delicacy. Better, far better, to be entirely ignorant of them than to be familiar with them only to our destruction."

"SHE SMILED ON ME."

MARIA'S worn out sobs let in the cold;
Maud's little arms are scarcely held
The strips of board with purpling veins they reach around;
Some fresh, slope bottle to rest,
Maud draws the rags across her breast,
And there is found

Her great brown eyes with silken fringe,
Border her cheeks of sunburned tinge
A tear sleeplet peeping by looked down and saw
Upon the child;

Then turned again with kind intent,
And wealth of tender smiles she lent
Upon the child;

And then a cheer and tender soul
Maud fine fray, but merged but Through chestnut streets and up the avenue
Coaking sister,

Along the eyes weary gloom
To an unexpected room,
Where a garden bears,

And flowers it down upon the floor
Her sister wash like rain-drops pour
And on the table lies the loaf.

"I'll be called by three strips of wood,
And cupped in rest, when they the dead
And called at the

A lady and this one mourns
Indeed, but not for long
When we had said and each, and resolved to pass Through

I know the rose a longer child,
Between the basket on and entitled
Where angels sing.

A REMINISCENCE.

THERE was an interesting though unimportant scene in the life of Abraham Lincoln, of which I was an eye-witness. It was on the occasion of the visit of about twenty Indian chiefs to the Executive Mansion, delegated by their respective tribes to treat personally with the Great Father in the adjustment of their affairs. They were habited in their attire of feathers and paint, and each one was impressed with the greatness of the occasion, the most eventful, probably, of their lives. Their interpreter placed them in the form of a crescent in the spacious East room, on the floor, as they would have been all at once on chairs. Thus they sat on the carpet in decorous silence awaited the arrival of the Chief Magistrate.

A number of people had been invited to be present at the interview, among whom were officers of the army, military and foreign diplomates, accompanied by their wives in fashionable toilet. Several of the latter, whose feet had not long left the pavements of the boulevards of Paris, looked on the carpet-colored men—two or three among eye-glasses with peculiar interest; the objects of it, however, did not appear to be aware of the soft but he dubbent no it at awl. When Art Cud came in the feller tole her sos he thez is plenty of rume here, an she set down by him. Then he let her, not nite away but lame by an the was role mad an get up an shamed the door. When she came back he kid her agen an she kep telling him to quit, but he dubbent til Jonny run a shand pin into his leg. Then Ant Cud reechit in an bawled Jonny owt, an both his ears and cawled him a son bitch an a dam fool an a nawthy theef, an the feller sed it was no matter. The flour what Graemn cawls seems blumed the other nite. She sent for eery boddy to come an see it an the hows was full of folks an he kid stanning awt on the pavement looking into the window. They was a coming an goen every minnit. They sed it was wunderful. I thawt it was a rot thing, an Jonny whispered pick it an I put it an I aint got over it yet. I was a scar I cant lare to set down enutch. Our girl has got a bow. He must be a very rich gentelman, he leaves such a big long gold chane wumbled twice around his neck, an then such a watch with too lids to it, and he sez it is a court eres nompter that is how he wants to no what time it is, if it is in the day time, he just lays it onto a tenis or a post an lets the sun shine on it, and then if he stane there til it is noon, he can tell egzactly what time it is. It is after noon he has to wate til nex day. When the sun dont shine he cant tell enyway, an when it is nite he dont no. And Unkl sez it is the best cunt watch she ever saw, I want you to send me ten shillen in your nex letter an rite rite away. I want to lare from you so much I cant wate.

Romance of a Twelve O'Clock Man.

RESIDENTS of Brooklyn in the vicinity of the City Hall have been much interested for several years in the regular appearance a few minutes before twelve o'clock every day of a man upon the steps of the City Hall as the clock strike twelve, and then disappears until the next day. This practice he has steadily continued, rain or shine, for seven years, until he is known by the sobriquet of the "Twelve o'clock man." His name is Thomas Conner, and various attempts have been made to connect him with romantic love stories, blighted affections, disappointment in marriage, lost property, etc., but they are simply basis. The man is a monomaniac upon the subject of a city job, and what brings him daily to the City Hall was a promise made to him seven years ago by a politician that if he would meet him at the City Hall at twelve o'clock he would procure him a job. Since then he has put in an appearance regularly at the appointed hour, and his manla seems to exhaust itself as soon as twelve o'clock is past. After that he is sane enough, and seeks odd jobs—raising coal, carrying out rubbish, sweeping streets, etc. He rejects charity with scorn. He lives in a shanty with his only sister, and though they are far from living in luxury, they enjoy a moderate amount of comfort. Men may come and women may go, but the twelve o'clock man at the City Hall is an established fact.—N. Y. Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Mushrooms and Toadstools.

IN an article on "Mushrooms as a Poison," suggested by the recent death of three persons in one family from eating toadstools, the Newcastle Daily Advertiser says:

"The lamentable cases of death by eating poisonous mushrooms in Ouhu have created considerable excitement, and a justifiable prejudice has arisen against the excellent whose esperanza charms have long been the delight of gourmands. This prejudice promises to result in the almost total banishment of one of the most delicious and delicate vegetables from the table a relish which possesses so many distinctions and qualities. Butter, save asterfo milius, starve upon beefsteak a la mush, than the item liffer a la toadstool.

"If mushrooms there are estimated to be almost five thousand varieties, of which the kinds known to medical Latinity as agaricus campestris and coprinatus are most commonly eaten. There are perhaps a half dozen other species this which are edible, but there are not more than a dozen altogether. The proportion of twelve to five thousand is sufficiently small to make the selection of the dozen rather precipitous. Taking the twelve from the five thousand, the varieties which are all poisonous, and one variety of which alone produced the deaths at Union. A peculiarity of the mushroom is that the varieties considered edible here are rejected in other nomens as poisonous, and those rejected here are eaten there with impunity. Another idiosyncrasy is that they are poisonous at one time and edible at another. But perhaps the queerest thing about the mushroom is that the variety which one man may eat with gust, and digest without difficulty, is noxious to another. To sum up the matter, mushrooms are distinctly untrustworthy as their low class in the vegetable kingdom would lead one to suspect.

"Since the rejection of mushrooms is preferable to any number of sanitary measures. Unless the mushrooms are cultivated for market they are not to be trusted. They are doubtful food at best, and we hope the Union cases will be a warning against the eating of them, as well as other dangerous products of the same kind. The recent fatalities are not the only ones of the kind that have occurred lately, and we feel justified in advising the abolition of mushrooms as a table delicacy. Better, far better, to be entirely ignorant of them than to be familiar with them only to our destruction."

"Without the legs," continued Lincoln, in answer to the mute interrogation, with a twinkle in his eye. "Why pale faces can get into a big canoe, shoved by steam there, for instance, at Washington, or Baltimoremen by a go round the world, and come back to the place from which we started."

With due respect to the Great Father, they evidently thought, to give it a mild term, that he was given to exaggeration. He started off again, to tell about the North Pole, the Torrid Zone, the length and breadth of the United States, and how long it would take a man to walk from one end of it to the other, in which he got somewhat entangled; then seeing a well-known man of science on his right, Lincoln placed his hand on his shoulder, gently urged him forward to a position in front of the Indians, to whom he said:

"But here is one of our learned men, who will tell you all about it."

Saying this, Lincoln bowed and withdrew, and the savant, taken by surprise, unbuttoned his extreme self from the difficulty as best he could, by continuing the theme where the President left off.

One sooner event followed the Indian meeting. Big Wolf, who had expressed the desire to have sausages like white men, satisfied his appetite in the hotel on this food without stint, and then, being tired of eating, fell into a sleep, endeavoring to escape, and not much disposed to show flight. They are now, however, becoming civilous, and show flight, and at times get startlingly aggressive.

A reasonable theory is that the hole leads to a cavern somewhere in the depths of the hill, where there are many thousands, possibly, of writhing serpents; and that these have gathered here from all directions for a winter residence. Some think that they are poisonous; others that they are harmless, except the "hissing adder," which are, doubtless, venomous. At all events, Mr. Graves informs us that three horses that had grazed upon the hill during the "rail" have had several spells of sickness.—Concordia (Kan.) Empire.

A NEW interesting example of the effect of the demand of a mechanical product in securing a supply is cited by the Scientific American. a recent inventor's experience in his endeavors to procure steel springs of great size and power. It appears that an English inventor had been actively engaged for some time in the construction of a tramway car, to be run by the motive power exerted by steel springs; the reports now stating that, after his earlier experiments, Mr. Leavens had, by indefatigable perseverance, induced the spring makers really to astonish themselves by their products. Thus, a band of steel has been rolled which, when tempered into a spring, will give a draft of 4,000 pounds; another spring of steel has been rolled having a width of four inches and a length of 181 feet. In the application of this spring power, the cars will move at the rate of 20 miles an hour, with power enough to propel a train of 40 tons. "Some enough," replied the promising clerk. A LITTLE bright-eyed four-year-old boy, upon hearing his father read the touching story of Joan of Arc, was greatly moved by her sad destiny; but when the part was reached where she was about to be burned to death at the stake, the poor little fellow could not contain himself longer, but sadlingly climbed his parent's arms, and, with big tears running down his plump cheeks, cried, "But, papa, where were the police?"

A NEGRO townwriter in Palmyra, La., was cut out to ring his bell and shout, "Col. Anderson will speak at the town-hall to-night, on the Greenback and Peter Cooper question." He made the same terms with his employer as time was his own (conditionally) on Saturday afternoons. He asked the young lady if he might come to her then and be taught, instead of on sundays. She willingly consented, and this arrangement continued for some time, to the profit and pleasure of both.

THE MEAN WRETCH.—Mr. Dorkins hurried into the house, and exclaimed, "Why, my dear, I've good news—a good one. If you were on the top of a church spire on the back of a goose, how would you get down?" Mrs. Dorkins thought she'd jump down, slide down the lightning conductor, fly down on the goose, fall down, and then gave it up. "Why, if you wanted to get down, you could pick it off the back of the goose," said Mr. Dorkins, exultantly.

MRS. BROOKS, who made in butter a model of the head of the dreaming "Iolanthe," gave some exhibitions of her work before a concert of ladies and gentlemen, in the judges' hall on the Centennial grounds, a few days since. She took about fifteen pounds of butter, a table and spoon and a piece of wire, and, with a looking-glass before her, she consulted the lights and shadows and contour of her own face, and in a little while a human head and face was successfully finished, to the satisfaction of those present.

Indian and Mound Builder's Relics.

There have recently been found in the vicinity of this place a very large number of very interesting relics of Indian occupation and workmanship, and also those which yet discovers remain toward a still older race, the pre historic people, Mound builders, or whatever they were. In a locality some three miles north of this place, on the west bank of the Kalamazoo, hundreds of arrow heads of various sizes, pipes of many different natural fashion and very striking workmanship, stone axes, pestles, and other evidences of an advanced age. The outside of arrow heads within certain prescribed limits would rather lead to guess that it may have been also a battlefield. Usually arrow heads have been found three, and quite a number of orange colored copper stones, finished, but not round, have been found in Ohio, have been picked up supposed to have been used in grinding, of which the locality were an abundance of. On the opposite side of the river up and down the banks of the creek are many earthen mounds, some of which, since the first of the insect on the top and in them times were be not unlike the portentous which the Governor Cooper has made of him, and on the past delights to point that. We have among us three or four experts in tracing up Indian relics, many of whom possess quite a wonderful knowledge of the subject, being also pre ften appearance of the ground and the character of the grass and vegetation to reveal a "find."

The most interesting task of the Mound builders, or whatever name else, that has been reported to us is a stone pavement, discovered when laying the foundation Division of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway, some three miles south of Kalamazoo in building the track across the bottom land near Kings Creek a considerable stone roadway several rods wide, which seemed to curve around the swamp from the spur of one of the bluffs. If investigation should prove the theory was correct, a very interesting, unexplained road is always a greater degree of civilization than has been attributed by such as the ancient builders working the territory embraced by the above peninsula.

Presidential Contingencies.

Another curious and unprecedented circumstance is possibly to be connected with the inauguration of the next President of the United States. It happens that the 4th of March will be on Sunday. The engagements therefore will doubtless be postponed until March 5. If it be decided that President Grant's term of office expires on March 4 at noon, and that he does not hold office until his successor is qualified, during the interregnum of one day under the Constitution, the President of the Senate would be President of the United States.

There is now, however, no Vice President whose to be excellion President of the Senate. If there was under the same circumstances his term of office would expire on March 4. The President pro tempore of the Senate, the Hon T W Ferry, of Michigan, holds that position, and in the natural order of things would be the President of the United States for a day under this circumstance, but it happens that Senator Ferry's term likewise, expires on the 4th of March. He cannot therefore be President pro tempore of the Senate during the day when he is not a member of that body.

If Perry should have been re-elected to the Senate he could not have been sworn into his new term of office before his old term expired. It will consequently be necessary for the Senate to elect a new President pro tempore for at least one day.

A young Danbury fop proposed to his father that he go fishing, but his father had some other business for him that day. "Father," said the young man, "do you know what Solomon said about boys getting fishes?" "Solomon didn't say anything about it," replied the parent. "Yes he did. He said if we spare the rod we spoil the child." "I won't spare it," said the old gentleman, promptly. And to punish him for his ill-luck he got back of the wrong rod.

PLAIN and COLORED WORK

The most absurd and ridiculous claim ever set up to partisan demagogism is that Tilden, Tammany Hall, and the solid South will return anything.

An open man two years old is mentioned in the Norristown Herald. We saw some apples the other day on a street stand that must have come off at least, they looked to be about that age.

The largest sentence on record was once rejected by a Western Judge. He sentenced a murderer for life, and afterward stopped two more years to the sentence because the prisoner asked him "no questions."

Talking about the wonders of Centennial furs an up town salesman called attention to fifteen cents in the town as early as the serviceable hot potato. Long wear-dad heels and he will be pleased with his bill.

Absolutely the most sweet and wonderful thing we ever read was a poem in Tuesday's Gazette, entitled "Lines on the Death of a Young Lady." Every word was a thing of beauty, and a joy forever. It was a poem that would have made Keats and Shelley turn green with envy. We would like to see another from the same pen.

A student in Paris, after passing three years in the Latin Quarter, wrote to his father as follows: "I have made up my mind to cut work, dear father, therefore, I should like to know whether I will be at freedom that I come to Paris to study."

Tilden is the first Presidential aspirant who has found it necessary to denominate that he is better than those who support him, and assure the people that he will stand between his party and all harm to the country.

Tilden is the Presidential chair will not "hanging Jack" in the barn—a horse plaything on the handle of his cane, or the "solid south." The hope of the country is in the Republican party. That will be a majority of over six Chase, to southern republics, at all events.

In the closed region of the prairies of West Africa, where there are no horses, camels, horses, oxen, or camels, and no beasts of "different" or "Cow Breed." They have domesticated birds. And to these creatures are healthy. Were our own Intelligent.

Mr. Thomas Hughes, of Rugby, England, is a publisher of a pamphlet entitled, "Tom Brown in America," which says that Tilden, Tammany Hall, and the solid South will return anything. Tilden is the first Presidential aspirant who has found it necessary to denominate that he is better than those who support him, and assure the people that he will stand between his party and all harm to the country.

Dr. Hayes on the British Arctic Expedition.

In U. S. Hayes writes to the New York World with reference to the failure of the British Arctic Expedition:

The Alert and Discovery are two fine ships, built on screw steamers. Never was there any expedition fitted out by any Government so bountifully. Nothing was wanting. They had every scientific appliance, and the expedition cost not less than $750,000. It was to go to the North Pole and make discoveries there, and the British flag was to be planted on the northern axis of the earth, and of course the world was to be astonished at British energy and British pluck. What is the result? One year of trial, ice eighty feet thick, and no chance of getting to the North Pole. In plain terms I don't believe a word of it, and I don't believe that the expedition had any right to return when it did. Why, I fell nearly all they did with my little boat each year. I sailed 3,000 miles—which was not much more than half the size of the Britishers. I had to steam, and sail and work to windward among the ice fields of South Sound, and, besides, entangled, I was forced to go into other quarters in a different direction, in latitude seventy-eight degrees seventeen minutes, at the most of that sound. There I remained ten months before the ice broke up and liberated me. With steam I could have gone further, but I had no other alternative than to await the spring, and a year over the frozen sea with dog sledges. I marked, as nearly as could be determined, latitude eighty-two degrees—say, 180 miles from the pole.

The voyage was begun April 4, and on October 12 following we reached March 82, over a toilsome march of 700 miles. The return journey was shorter, as at 81 I estimated my journey to the pole, and it occupied sixty days. Inside this I traveled over a sea which the English expedition sailed over at a steamer, because they had steam. They reached, therefore, to encounter what I encountered—open water—that is to say, Lady Franklin Bay, where I crossed and explored. Practically therefore, the English expedition did not get there when I did, and why, with a winter harbor in Lady Franklin Bay, they did not go on is more than I can understand. My winter harbor was in latitude 78 deg. 37 min., or 180 miles from the pole, when I served as surgeon, wintered in latitude 78 deg. 37 min.—both on the remotest side of south Sound. In this independence of all opinions as to the ice barrier. I crossed over to the land of my own discovery, Grinnell Land, and went some sixty miles further, and looked out on Kane and Hayes Sea. Kane and I were separated from each other by a space of 1,000 miles, and yet both were in the open water. Neither of us encountered the southern land which we discovered. Now, please remember that this great English expedition really started where I left off. The North Pole was only approached by some eighty miles nearer than I approached it. It is said that the ice was eighty feet thick. In plain English, I don't believe it, and I don't understand how it happened that a grand expedition, fitted out with such a great flourish of trumpets, at such enormous cost, should have got frightened after one winter, and hurried home with the old cry that the North Pole could be reached. They did not stay there long enough to prove it or tell anything about it. To be sure, the matter of getting to the North Pole is of little consequence in a business point of view. It may be of no consequence whatever, but here is an expedition fitted out expressly to do it; has unlimited time; has every possible advantage; has the unqualified support of the British Government, and yet, frightened by one winter's experience, hurries home to report whether failure. The Polaris

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting powerful influences upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the foul, colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and specially restoring the healthy tone of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fortified.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative power in the most obstinate and virulent cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons employed in Paint and Mineral Mills as Painters, Type-setters, Gold Beaters and others, as they are liable to do, are subject to disorders of the Stomach. To guard against this take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many individuals, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, or vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or at the turn of life, these Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you feel its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when you find your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

A J McLeod, Esq.,

In an article which appeared in the Petoskey Democrat over your signature, you accuse me of complicity with Norwood and Boyce Village, and of the Indian vote. The disputed States are Florida (8), Louisiana (8) and South Carolina (7), any one of which will elect Tilden, and all for Hayes will secure his election. Both parties claim the votes of these States, the Republican National Committee announcing, on the morning of the 10th, that Hayes was certainly elected, but the Democrats confidently claimed a different result.

The closeness of the Presidential election and the uncertainty existing as to the votes of Florida, Louisiana and South Carolina, caused great excitement throughout the country on the 9th. Conflicting dispatches were being received, at both Republican and Democratic headquarters in Washington, New York and other cities, and large crowds gathered around the different news centers, swaiting with intense anxiety the reports as they came over the wires.

The End of a Diamond Wedding.

SOME years ago there was a diamond wedding in a brownstone mansion close to Fifth avenue. It was in all respects a recherche affair—the gifts were magnificent and costly, and the young couple started in existence upon the voyage of life. After a couple of seasons in Europe the young wife was taken sick, and died in her mother's house in this city. Among the original presents was a pair-vanity of solid silver, duly marked with the bride's initials. This silver was valued at over $6,000. It was handsomely encased, and, for convenience sake, after the woman's death, was placed in a common packing trunk and stored in the vaults of a safe deposit company. The sequel to this story happened on Monday last, when the husband, now a bankrupt, pledged the whole of the silver to a professional moneylender for a paltry $800. Those who know him freely predict that he will let the whole of it go when his obligation matures, and that he will be unable to repay the amount of the loan. A similar sequel was recorded last year to a stylish wedding in Grace church only twenty months before. The presents and jewels of the wedding-day were sold for a mere pittance to buy bread and meat, and both of the parties are penniless. In the other case first mentioned, there is not a shadow of doubt that the silver thus pledged will be sacrificed in the manner.—N. Y. Cor. Chicago Tribune.

The Cost of Big Guns.

THE trials of the eighty-one-ton gun which have recently taken place in England are reported as being conveniently satisfactory to the artillerists, but it may be doubted whether those who are footing the bills, the tax-payers, will share in the officially expressed gratification. At every discharge of this monster weapon over 200 pounds of powder are exploded at a cost of from $125 to $150. To this must be added the expense of shell and fuses. Then the gun itself, originally estimated to cost $40,000, has actually necessitated an expenditure of some $125,000, besides the construction of a railway at Woolwich, a large for its transportation and several huge cranes. Moreover the living of the gun at Shoeburyness has had the effect of blowing down or at least seriously shattering the huts and cottages of that military settlement, so that it will nearly all have to be rebuilt at Government expense. Meanwhile, on this side of the Atlantic, we complacently view these rather costly proceedings, profit by the results of the experiments, and congratulate ourselves that we are not paying for them. —Scientific American.

Matrimony by the Wholesale.

LAST Saturday there was a very enormous and unusual sight upon East Second street, which was witnessed by thousands of people. It was a procession of thirty-two young couples, all of them dressed in the costume of the Bohemians or Czechs—the men in short, richly-embroidered jackets, the girls in white skirts, crimson jackets and green velvet caps, embroidered with gold and silver cord. This novel procession was headed by a tall, fine-looking man in full regimentals, and moved through Essex street to Broome to a hall in that street, where the thirty-two couples were duly united in marriage. It seems that this day had been purposely set apart by the couples in question and their parents and relatives, in order to give eclat to the ceremony and inspire the parties with something of the reverence and religious awe which marriage rites produce in Bohemia. One curious part of the affair was, that, these being the purest here to marry them in the Czech language, the expectant brides grooms climbed together and paid the expenses of the Rt. Rev. Bishop Rabbenec, of Prague, whom they engaged to cross the ocean for no other purpose than to perform the ceremony. Another curious feature of the affair is, that there were thirty-three couples desiring marriage, but the Czechs consider thirty-three an unlucky number, and hence one couple drawn by lot had to retire, but they were promised that their marriage should be celebrated this week. After the ceremony bread and salt were distributed to the guests. Instead of kissing the bride, the relatives gave veil to loud lamentations. A resident seamstress remarked that the married couples will utter their lamentations in the divorce courts.—N. Y. Cor. Chicago Tribune.

What Finance Has Accomplished.

AT a recent meeting of the Social Science Congress in Liverpool, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M. P., delivered an address, in the course of which he said:

"Notwithstanding the one or two of the most extraordinary economic facts of modern times, namely, the revival of France from the misfortunes and losses entailed upon her by her war with Germany, the rest of the country appear to be more hopelessly crushed by the weight of its losses and by the large maternity imposed upon it by the victors. Yet she has borne her burden with heroism, and has emerged from her difficulties with an elasticity which has surprised Europe. The contrast between France and Germany at this moment is most remarkable. The defeated, humiliated and plundered country is, apparently, richer than ever. The victorious country, the "Pan de Millards," the recipients of the indemnity, appears to be not only none the richer, but absolutely the poorer for the transaction. The feverish excitement caused by the influx of so much wealth has now given place to a reaction in which all commercial transactions are involved; general gloom and distress pervades the country, as a recent counte paper published at Berlin, it was suggested as a remedy for the general distress in Germany, as compared with France, that Germany should again declare war against France, that it should again march its armies to Paris, again defeat those of France, but in making peace, in lieu of imposing an indemnity of 200,000,000 on France, it should agree to pay that amount to the conquered. [Cheers and laughter.] By that means alone, it was humorously suggested, would Germany secure to herself the prosperity which France was enjoying. What, then, is the economic explanation of this great difference in the condition of the two countries? Why is it that the loss of two milliards has not made the one country poorer or the gain not made the other country richer? Is not the explanation to be found in this, that the true and only source of wealth is production and saving? The French people are the most industrious and saving that the world contains. In no other country is work so widely distributed. In none are the habits of industry, economy and thrift more universally exercised. After the war these people, from the highest to the lowest, met their losses by even greater industry and economies than ever. Now, when they have retrieved their losses and overcome their difficulties, this habit is still continued. On the other hand, the influx of money to Germany led to a general expansion, not only of trade, but of the habits of living. Luxury of all kinds increased. Feebly speculations multiplied. Unproductive employment was stimulated. In the subsequent collapse the people as a whole have lost more than they gained by the indemnity, while it is no easy task to divert so much unproductive labor into its old channels of production. The great recuperative power shown by France has again turned the attention of economists to her social condition. What is it that constitutes her strength? What is it that creates this universal habit of thrift and industry? It cannot, I think, be doubted that the answer is to be found in the wide distribution of property which is so distinguishing a feature of the French system. Upward of seven millions of persons own property in land or houses, and of these five and a half millions are owners of agricultural land. Upward of four millions of persons own between $100 and $1,000 of Rentes. The passion for land has not only created five millions of peasant proprietors, the most industrious and thrifty people in the world, but it has spread through the whole population, from the highest to the lowest, the feeling of individual ownership, the desire to become independent and the habit of thrift and saving which enables them to become so."

Pension Report.

Hon. J. A. Bentley, Commissioner of Pensions, has furnished to the Secretary of the Interior the annual report exhibiting the operations of the Pension Bureau for the last fiscal year.

It appears that the total number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1876, was 234,821, or 2,786 more than the total number the year previous. The roll of army invalid pensioners was 169,146, and the additions during the year were 6,813, and the number dropped the 30th of June from the rolls on account of widows and minors on the roll decreased, 3,745, leaving 3,068 more. The total number of the survivors of the war of 1812 borne on the roll at the close of the last fiscal year was 18,865, showing that 1,999 had died during the entire months.

The total amount paid out for pensions during the year was $29,381,000, which, to manage to save a sixpence now and then, an' put away in the old lime-tree pot on the chimpley there, but as soon as John took any money he always seemed to melt right away. It was gone the first I knew, an' I didn't know where any more was coming from. But I begin to think, ma'am, there's always something to help one along in this feelin' an' has got some one to work for. So I looked about an' good luck was on my side, for I got a job of making vests for a shop down town; an' though it didn't bring in a great deal, it brought in something, an' as I said to John, when he got to fretting over it, "Something's a good deal better'n nothing."

"Don't you worry," says I; I won't see you an' the children starve yet awhile. You've worked yourself all out for us, an' now it's my time to do something, an' let you rest up."

But it was hard work keeping the wolf outside the door. The children had such big appetites that it used to scare me to see the bread go; but somehow, ma'am, for all that, I always enjoyed seein' 'em eat. It did me as much good, you see. An' I'm sure I don't know what I should have done without the children to help me.

There was Mary. She was ten years old last Christmas, an' it would have done your heart good to see how handy she was doing up the dishes, an' getting the table ready, an' sweeping out the litter the boys made. While she worked, I could be sewing, you see, and the dear child really more than paid her way, ma'am. An Johnnie an' Joe—they used to pick up blocks to hatch, an' fingerboards at the shop an' bring me more; an' they'd play with the little ones an' keep 'em' boys as I could work, an' they helped me more than enough to pay their way, ma'am, I assure you. It was really wonderful the sight of work them three children could do. I used to tell John I didn't see what would become of us if it hadn't been for 'em.

It was in the winter that Uncle William came down to visit us. He lives up in the hills, and he's got a good farm, an' is pretty well off. He brought a couple of turkeys an' a wh ole bag full of corn meal, an' Aunt Rachel sent a lot of nick-nacks to the children, an' we had a splendid visit. An' I do believe, ma'am, he enjoyed his visit with the children more'n he did with John an' me as much, anyway. It used to make him laugh to see 'em eat johnnycake. They didn't get that often, you know, an' when they did they relished it.

"You've got a nice family of little shavers a-growin' up round you," says he. "I suppose its sinful to envy anybody, but I wish I had some like 'em." An' then Uncle William got up an' went to the window, an' stood looking out for a long time. I knew what he was thinking of, you see. Two little boys are buried in the old graveyard by the meeting-house, up at Hillbury, an' I knew he was thinking what a sight of comfort they'd been to him if they'd lived.

"You've got one thing to be thankful for, Uncle William," said John, softly. "If you can't have 'em here, you know you've got 'em over there, an' it's only waiting a spell, and then you will have 'em always."

Well, after Uncle William went home we missed him ever so much, and the children the most. They'd took a great fancy to him, you see.

It was about six weeks after that, that we got a letter from him John owns it over to me. Uncle William wanted us to give him one of the children.

"What do you think about it?" says John.

"I don't know," says I. You see, it come so sudden that I hadn't had time to think it over. Maybe it would be the best thing we could do. Uncle William would do as well by 'em as we could and they'd have a good home. And Uncle William would've give all his property to the one we let him have, when he was through with it, and send him or her to school, and take as good care of it as if it was his own.

"You don't know how lonesome it is since I got home," he wrote, "I keep thinking of the children, and I want one to keep. You've got more than you can take care of. You wouldn't miss one."

"I like enough we'd better let him have one," says John, after thinking it over a spell.

"Which one?" says I, and something seemed to choke me when I said it.

"I don't know," says John; "which do you think we can spare best?"

"I couldn't spare Mary," says I; "she does most all the house work. I couldn't get along without her at all. An' Johnnie an' Joe, we need them the worst way, for they're good boys, and help keep things together. We couldn't spare them, John."

"No that's so," says he, "we can't spare the three oldest. We'll have to let one of the little ones go."

"I don't know which one," says I, feeling a great lump in my throat; "which one would you think, John?"

"I don't know," says he, slowly; "let's go and look at 'em".

So we took the candle and went up stairs, where the children were all asleep.

Dear me, ma'am! I felt somehow as if they were dead, and we were taking a last look at the dear things. My hand trembled so I could hardly hold the candle.

"Of course we can't think of letting Mary or Johnnie or Joe go," says John, and his voice sounded very queer. "It must be one of the others."

Both the little boys had their three youngest sleep, and I sat down on the bed and looked at 'em. Minnie had little Georgie's head on her arm, and his yellow curls were all tumbled over his face, and he was pretty as my picture of an angel; and Dottie Dimple, as we always called her—she was such a wee midget of a thing—was cuddled down beside 'em, with her dolly in her arms, fast asleep.

"I couldn't think of letting Minnie go," says John, "she looks so much like mother; and I've always took to her, so she wouldn't be contented away from me." And then he reclined over and kissed her, and I saw a tear shining on her face in the candlelight.

"An' little Georgie's always been mother's boy," says I, choking up again at the thought of letting him go. "He sets by me more'n the rest; some way I wouldn't part with him. Ain't he pretty, John?" an' I held the candle so it could shimmer his yellow hair.

"Yes, he is a bright, dear little boy," says John, proud as he could be of the little fellow, if he was mother's boy. "But you wouldn't think of letting him have Dottie Dimple, would you?" an', I declare, his voice shook as much as if he was going to cry.

"Oh, no," says I, breaking right down, an' I reached down an' hugged little Dimple up tight to me. "There shan't anybody have little Dimple while I'm alive."

I don't see how we can spare any of 'em," says John; "I don't believe we can."

"We can't," says I; "I'm willing to work twice as hard, John, but I ain't willing to let the children go. God gave 'em to us to keep, and it wouldn't be right."

And then, ma'am, we kissed 'em every one, and we wrote back to Uncle William that we couldn't let let one go. And he sent down a lot of things the next week—enough to last us half the winter, till John got well, anyway—and he wrote he didn't blame us a bit. "I wouldn't have let one go if I'd been in your place," says he.

You see, ma'am, it's hard to tell which one you can spare best, and when you come to choose, you find you can't spare any. Bless the dear things! they're a deal of comfort, and they help us so much; more'n any one'd think, ma'am. If we'd a dozen I dare say we'd find it just as hard to choose.—John R. Bayford, in Indoor and Out.

Across the Virgin River in Nevada are some of the most remarkable salt formations in the world. They are in fact mountains of crystal, extending for more than thirty miles. The salt lies under a shallow covering of earth, and is raised by blasting. Most of it is perfectly pure, and so clear that fine print can be read through a foot of it.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

THE Ultisane are the only civilized people who, being possessed of an ideographic system of writing, and who, having become acquainted with the alphabetical and syllabic systems, have deliberately chosen to maintain their own ideographic characters.

AT THE Social Science Congress, recently held at Liverpool, Mr. W. H. James, M. P., spoke very forcibly to the question of incorporating a professional and technical training with a sound system of general education. He traced the history of the City Guilds of London, showed how enormously wealthy they must be, how this wealth is totally misspent, and maintained that the country had a perfect right to ask an account of their stewardship, and appropriate the funds, if necessary, for educational purposes.

THE traffic receipts on the railways in the United Kingdom for the week ended Oct. 4, amounted, on 15,342 miles, to £1,225,156, and for the corresponding week in 1875, on 15,326.5 miles, to £1,210,120, showing an increase of 246¼ miles, and an increase of £9,235. The gross receipts on 17 of the principal railways in the United Kingdom amounted for the week, on 12,503 miles, to £1,159,068, and for the corresponding week in 1875, on 11,742¾ miles, to £1,092,942, showing an increase of 241 miles, and an increase of £75,141.—Railway Age.

PRINCIPAL HAWSON, of Montreal, says that we "do not usually give the child credit for the very complex and difficult task of learning to read. First, these are twenty-six different letters to become familiar with; then the mind is told that these letters merely represent certain sounds, and some of the letters several sounds; these letters are afterwards grouped and words are formed, but words do not generally represent more than sounds, and they have to be again grouped before they represent our ideas. It should be the aim of the teacher to break up as fine as he can this complex task, and give it in very little bits to the children."

THE San Francisco Post says: "There are now 143 wheat vessels en route to Europe from this port, all cleared since July 1. This is a much larger fleet than ever before to be en route to Europe from the Pacific States at this season of the year. The wheat fleet in port comprises seventy-three vessels, representing 95,280 tons of tonnage, with a carrying capacity for 140,000 tons, or 2,800,000 centals of wheat, all of which must be loaded by the 1st of January. There are also seventeen ships and barks in port awaiting charter, most of which are suitable to carry wheat. These vessels represent 20,000 tons of tonnage, and there are 20,000 tons more fully due."

Coloring Human Hair by Eating Eggs.

THE much-vexed question, How to get gold hair, is solved at last. White hair, whether it has been long held a fair-haired Nation, who knows, but the sufferers what other Nations have gone through to win the hair despised of the Gods, have long since inured to hoard of torments in pursuit of this fictitious gold. One who had to be turned round in the sun for hours during the process, bore with stoic fortitude all the terrible headaches involved each week, nor ever complained of what she had to pay, though after all, she was scarcely ever electro-plated. Some run other risks, in robbing Teutor corpses of their long curls; but, and all is ineffectual while eyes and skin remain to give the lie to hair. Now, no mere dyes, migrations or wigs will be necessary. Everybody may sport the "clad gold hair—nay, blue eyes, too, and snowy skins. All you have to do is to go and live on an island and eat penguins eggs—and the more you eat the fairer you will get. None need despair, for hair too dark to turn to gold turns red, and red hair, being more the rage than maxen, tant pour mieux. The isle in question is one of the Crozet group, on which the survivors of the unfortunate Strathmore were wrecked last year, and only rescued after six months' durance vile. They had little to eat but penguins' eggs (and doubtless the eggs without the island would be of no avail), but the slight inconvenience of a sameness in food would be readily encountered by the votaries of fashion. A survivor writes: "The eggs did every one a great deal of good. * * * A most remarkable thing was that every one had fair skins and light hair, dark faces and hair being quite changed, black hair turning brown or red, and fairer people quite flaxen." If some enterprising Englishman does not immediately set up a hotel on 168 enchanted spot, we shall never give John Bull credit for knowing how to make his fortune.—London Belle.

Drapery for Dresses.

THERE is a new idea in drapery for the back of skirts, approved by ladies who do not like the fullness of the new dresses nor the looping up of older ones. This is to take a whole width of the silk or velveteen a scarf, the French modistes call it—and arrange it in a soft bow having one immense knot with a loop above and two loops below, or perhaps one loop and an end, and place it below the belt so as to almost cover the back breadths of the lower skirt, and to meet in an irregular way the regular side of Bonnegee drapery. Now if anything like a scarf bow of this exaggerated size is made, it will be simply ludicrous, but a soft bow with goods arranged in this way is very handsome, and, moreover, does not cut up or wrinkle the materials. At least three yards of brocaded silk or of velvet are required. The great loop at the top at a quarter of a yard deep, which takes half a yard, and the two loops below are still deeper; the strap of buttonholes is of the whole width of the silk, and the hanging end is three fourths long, or even more if the train is deep, this end is fringed. Another way of arranging this scarf width is to sew it on with the belt at the top of the back breadths of the lower skirt, and attach it to those widths in three or four large deep, irregular loops and one square hanging end. The loops are partly turned inward straight, and part toward the left. The sides and end of the breadth are widely hemmed, faced or perhaps trimmed with a broad galloon or a bias band of velvet. This is a way of arranging the backs of dresses that have two scarf drapers across the front. Thus, for instance, a black silk dress has two deep end scarfs covering the front, and these in their turn are almost covered by chenille fringe and velvet bands. The scarf width behind has three large loops with three-fourths of a yard of silk in each loop, and a single square end trimmed across with velvet and fringe. The dressy basque with square tails behind has a square piece of figured black thread lace laid in folds in the open neck, and edged with lace. Above this is a standing Medicis collar of velvet, with a blender silk collar at the back. Bows of black velvet are low down on the basque behind, and chenille fringe edges the front. To make this basque still more dressy for dinner parties, the sleeves of the silk may be removed, and others of figured black lace be set in. Black brocaded silk basques with black figured lace sleeves are especially handsome.—Harper's Bazar.

Johnny's Dreadful Punishment.

JOHNNY had been naughty. It's astonishing how naughty two-year-old babies can be when they try; and Johnny had tried. His blue eyes didn't look as usual, and his hair wasn't as golden, and instead of a bright smile a cunning—oh! dear, what am I saying?—an ugly pout rested on his pretty little mouth. There he stood in the middle of the floor, baby hands on baby lips, feet very wide apart, the sweetest—I mean the mightiest—wee rebel that ever defied mamma. Just think of it, only two years old, and defy your mamma! "Will you be good?" asked mamma, plenty. "No, mamma," replied Johnny. Mamma opened her eyes—they were not as blue as Johnny's—very wide. "You won't?" she said. "No, ma'am," repeated Johnny. "Then" said she, solemnly, "you must be punished. Go into the parlor and stay in there until you can say, 'Yes, ma'am.'" Johnny went, and mamma closed the door, expecting to hear the wished-for "Yes," shouted forth instantly. But, to her great surprise, she heard not a word or cry. Five minutes passed; utter silence. Ten minutes went by; not the slightest sound; and mamma began to grow impatient—for, after the manner of mammas, she was longing to kiss and forgive her boy. "Oh! the blessed darling," she said to herself, as the twenth minute stole away; "the punishment is too dreadful for him. How could I have been so hard hearted? To shut a merry little thing like that in a dark place; a baby, that should never be out of sunshine expect when he's asleep; it's too bad." And she flew to open the closet door. "John," as his father calls him, looked up at her, his whole face sparkling with fun. The blue had come back to his eyes and the gold to his hair and the smile to his lips. In his chubby hand he held the last piece of meat, just fourteen minutes before, had been a fine, brown, fragrant, fresh-baked loaf of cake. Crumbs covered his face from chin to eyes, his cheeks shone, and sundry crisp fragments clung to his neck and bib. "Good gracious!" said mamma. "Good take!" said Johnny.—Madge Elliot, in Baltimore's Mouthly.

For Young Readers.

THE LITTLE BOY I DREAMED ABOUT.

The little boy I dreamed about
Is not the same world as mine;
He's not like real children are,
But I love him all the time.

He does not know sin and storm and pain
He's not like earthly girls and boys,
And pull the pigeon's feathers out
To see how it will look with none.

Or fight the bantams, one by one.

He does not bite, and cry and hit,
And when he's in a temper wrong,
To show the kitten down the hall
To me how often it can die.

He's stranger than you can wonder why.)

He never was—was late—I know
A bird is singing near his bed,
He tells the first ray—"Now I may go
To wake the children, see!" He never said,
When told to do a thing: "I will, Fred."

If I said "Go," he would not stay
To vex me like the rest of you;
They have, like the wind, sway,
And when I bid them go
To please, himself—the little fool.

Let any stranger come who can,
He will not see him; it is none
But lady "me" that frightens,
I wish you would go home, Miss.

I think he knows more than you.

He never was—was late—I know
He does not play in silver sand,
But if you'll believe me then,
I need believe in Fairy-land,
Because he lets me understand—

Head "dead" and know I do not know.
The wonder children die. We say
Mamma goes fast to fill from the snow
That was her very own bodice—

"God's will" is what the Christians say.

Like you, or I do, or you can be,
When you are good, he looks so good,
If I live the no denser star I see
Is all the more, I do feel sure.
The Little Boy I dreamed about.

GEORGE STEPHEN BROWN.

A LOUD scream came from the next room, then another and another, followed by loud crying, which grew louder and louder. Suddenly there burst into my room a little boy of five years, his face covered with tears, and his mouth wide open, as he screamed and sobbed, and ran toward me, crying, "Auntie! auntie!"

I had seen him in this way more than once, and so knew he was not hurt. I sat still, and he threw his arms around me, hid his face in my lap, and cried till the tears made my collar quite wet.

"What is the matter, Georgie?" said I.

Mamma won't let me go to town in the carriage with her to-day," he said, with so many sobs I could scarcely understand him.

"Mamma knows best," said I; "and it must be for some good reason that she does not take you."

"But I want to go—I want to go; I shall have to try if I don't go; I can't help it. Oh, mamma might let me go just as well as not!" and he cried louder than ever.

I waited till he began to be calm, and then said, gently, "Georgie, don't you love your mamma?"

"Yes, I do," he said; "I love her very much."

"Then why don't you like to do as she says?" I asked.

"I don't know," said Georgie.

"I know," said I, "and I will tell you; it is because you love somebody else better."

"No; I love mamma better than anyone in the whole world," he said.

"Well, I know some one you love much better," said I.

"Who is it?" said Georgie.

"It is a boy about your size, named George Stephen Brown.

Georgie stopped sobbing, stood up, and looked at me in surprise; for that was his own name.

"Yes," I said; "you love that boy better than anyone in the world. You are always thinking of what he wants, and what will please him. Now this George Stephen Brown does not know what a simpleton he is, and has a very bad habit of crying and screaming when not to-do or not to-be-getting against his own will. He often annoys your mamma in this way, and you let him do it, when you could stop him

Views of Two Candidates.

The reader cannot fail to note the marked difference between the following utterances—between the modest, candid, patriotic, statesmanlike talk of Hayes, and the egotistic, boobastic, supercilious tone of Tilden. They are from responses made by the two Presidential candidates to tenders who paid their respects to them after the election and when there was strong reason for supposing that Mr. Tilden was elected:

WHAT HAYES SAYS.

I don't care for my self, for the party—yes, and the country too,—can stand it, but I do care for the poor colored men of the South. I do not fear that business will be greatly disturbed by Mr. Tilden's election. Trade governs itself. Capitalists may just at present say we won't lend money, but it will only be a tuesday's wonder, which will wear away as soon as they recover from the chagrin of defeat. Business will, I think, go on as usual. I do not think parties responsible for the financial depression. We see the troubles they have had in Germany and Austria. If any part of the country suffers or remains at a standstill, it will be the South under the new regime. Northern men can't live there, and will leave, and immigration into the States will cease; but as I said before, I do pity the poor black race of the South. The result will be that the Southern people will practically treat the Constitutional amendments as nullities, and the colored man's fate will be worse than when he was in slavery, with a humane master to look after his interests. This is the only reason I regret that the news is as it is.

WHAT TILDEN SAYS.

When I shall be officially notified of my success, I will be pleased to let you know my intentions, but not before.

My election was due to the fact that the people looked more to the issues of the common than to party restraints.

Fealty to party was to a great extent forgotten. There is no doubt that I received a great number of Republican votes, and when the result is generally known and officially proclaimed, all true citizens, whether Republicans or Democrats, will hail the event as a great National benefit, and indicative at least one thing, and that is the unity of all sections of the country. This is a very essential decision. The election has also been decided in part upon my record as Governor. It was well scanned and construed in divers ways, and the result has convinced me that I have in that capacity done well enough to satisfy the masses of the people. The closeness of the contest shows conclusively what opposition I had to overcome. I have every reason to be well pleased with the result. I did not expect a large majority in the Electoral College. I feel extremely well to-day.

The suggestion has been made that the Senate, being in one sense a continuous body, might choose a presiding officer just before the 4th March, from among those Senators whose terms do not expire on that day, and thus provide an acting President for the interregnum between the close of Grant's term and the swearing in of the new President. But the best statesmen in the land seem to be disagreed on that. Last winter, it will be remembered, a question arose as to whether the President pro tempore of the Senate could hold over a recess and preside at the next session. The question was left undecided, and to make sure of a legal presiding officer Senator Ferry was elected over again. Some of the eastern papers are now claiming that Mr. Ferry only holds that office till the Senate meets, and that a new presiding officer must then be chosen. This conclusion, however, would seem to carry him over the recess and would answer for the interregnum above spoken of, unless the Senate of the Forty-Fourth Congress which expires on the 4th of March should be deemed incompetent to provide for the office beyond that term.

We are still holding the throat of our rooster between our thumb and forefinger.

An inebriate got into a car and became very troublesome and annoying to the other passengers, so much so that it was proposed to eject him; but a genial and kind-hearted reverend doctor, who was also a passenger, interposed for his, and soothed him into good behavior for the remainder of the journey. Before leaving, however, he scowled upon the occupant of the car, and muttered some word of contempt; but he shook hands warmly with the doctor, and said: "Good day, my friend. I see you know what it is to be drunk."

All Sorts.

The New York Tribune of Monday says: "The whole country unites in a vote of thanks to President Grant."

Any man who has made a bet on election, whether he has won or not, has this consolation, at least that he has broken a statute of his State.

Tilden's feelings were hurt fully $100,000 worth during the late cruel war, and he will put this in along with the other rebel claims.

Pennsylvania's majority for Hayes is about 14,000, and Connecticut's majority for Tilden is 2,200, Hayes' majority in Ohio is 7,352.

The Republican majority in Illinois ranges from 15,000 to 19,000, and the Legislature will be Republican by six majority on joint ballot.

After inrading several columns of roosters through their sheets for a week or so, the Democratic journals that reach us to day are beginning to argue the case.

The New York World's table of the electoral vote, before the election, did not claim either South Carolina or Florida, and it claimed to elect Tilden without Louisiana.

Massachusetts polled 257,452 votes for President, giving Hayes 40,918 majority. For Governor, Rice, Republican, received 34,455 majority over Charles Francis Adams.

Tennessee's majority for Tilden will be about 40,000, and her Congressional delegation will stand eight Democrats two Republicans—a Republican gain of one—McFarland, in the First District.

As far as heard from, the prospect is that the House of Representative of the next Congress will be very close, probably neither party having a majority of more than two or three.

A writer of weather reports in one of the English daily journals states that thunder storms are annually becoming less frequent in the vicinity of London. He attributes the fact to the purification of the Thames and the improved drainage of the city. He also states that the most violent storms fellow in their course the line of polluted rivers, stagnant pools swampy grounds, and badly-drained towns, which exhale large quantities of nutrous, sulphurous, and other unwholesome vapors.

PLAIN and COLORED WORK.

There are now in England eight survivors of the battle of Trafalgar—the last of Nelson's great naval conflicts. Three of these were midshipmen then and are admirals now.

There is a religious journal somewhere in the East which fully indorses the recent sentence of prize-fighters in New Jersey, "because in this case all the rules of the ring were set at naught."

There is a vague suspicion in the public mind that this delay in the verdict is a conspiracy to sell newspapers. In the newspaper offices, on the contrary there is a firm conviction that this is a deliberate plot to kill off the editors.

At a late meeting of the Paris Academy of Sciences, a paper was read advocating the planting of Indian corn among grape vines, to save them from the ravages of the phylloxera. The insects abandon the vines to feed on the roots of the corn.

Her Majesty Queen Ranevalomanjaka of Madagascar is a woman of brains. She has issued a proclamation to her subjects solemnly warning them not to have anything to do with the cup that inebriates; and she concludes with a scarce addressed to those who sell the pestilent beverage.

A correspondent has met Mr. Henage, the English diplomatic service, who has just married the Princess Salm Salm, and asked him where he was going to settle. "Oh!" said he, "we don't know yet. My wife is living at Petersburg and I in London till we see how we suit each other."

In France, Belgium and Germany, there are twenty five separate schools of instruction in connection with textile industries, besides seven belonging to polytechnic institutions. The majority of them are as well equipped with scientific laboratories, and as complete in their organization and arrangements, as any schools on the continent.

The first Siberian university will be located at Omsk, and will have a medical and physico mathematical faculty. Omsk is situated at the confluence of the Om and Irtisk Rivers, and is the seat of the Governor General of Western Siberia. It has a population of 27,000, military schools, manufactories, mining works and a considerable trade.

In England experiments are in progress, with process for increasing durability of iron rails which promises a great success. An eminent railway official has asserted confidentially that by the process iron rails can be produced more durable than steel, at an increased cost of only five dollars per ton over ordinary iron rails.

Now is the time for items respecting the venerable voter, who, begining by voting for Washington or Adams, ended perhaps by voting for Hayes or Tilden. Particularly mention is due to Capt. Chester Hughes of Wrentham, Mass., who, being 99 years of age, in spite of the pitiless storms, walked five miles to the polls to vote for Hayes and Wheeler. It is not necessary to say that there is no doubt about the returns from Wrentham.

The meteorology of Australia is very carefully studied. At seventy observing stations, extending over the whole breadth of the continent, the rainfall is being investigated, as also the annual southerly march of the northerly monsoon, which prevails on the north coast from the middle of November to March, and sometimes extends its influence in heavy thunder storms across the continent.

Prof. Huxley, in conversation with Mr. Conway, since his return to England, expressed the fear that the Americans do not recognize some of their greatest men. There are Prof. Dana, for instance, and Prof. Marsh, and Leidy, of Philadelphia, who in England have long been in the front rank, yet the Centennial article in the North American Review on American science hardly more than mentioned them.

The Orleans Princes have begun an action of ouster against Desire Evanit, who has a plot of land near the forest of Bondy which he bid in for 800 francs at the State sale of property in 1852 Now, after a quarter of a century, the Orleans Princes the richest men of their rank in Europe have banded together to dispossess the poor man. There is much excitement over the affair in Paris, and it is likely to assume political importance.

Length of service in the British army often extends beyond the limits usual in this country. Attention has been directed to the case of Col. Henry Grierson, retired from the Fifteenth Foot after a service of forty three years in the corps, six of which were passed in it in company with his father, the late Lieut. Col. W. Grierson, who joined the regiment as ensign in August, 1804. Thus father and son served in the regiment upward of seventy-two years.

A Sterling Vegetable Remedy

Which Eradicates

DISEASES OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS, DYSPEPSIA, GRAVEL, PILES, URINARY TROUBLES, NERVOUS DEBILITY, PALPITATION OF THE HEART, TORPIDITY OF THE LIVER, CONSTIPATION, SCROFULOUS AFFECTIONS, AND FEMALE COMPLAINTS.

For nearly a quarter of a century this sterling preparation has received living curses of the various diseases to which it is adapted, and thousands of persons, of perfect reliability, in all classes of society bear hearty testimonial to its wonderful remedial efficacy.

As a remedy for diseases of the Throat and Lungs it has achieved a popularity rivalled by that of few proprietary remedies. Experience has shown that for those who are troubled with weakness of the Lungs it is the best possible protective against Consumption, and it may be relied on with certainty to eradicate Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Diphtheria, and Soreness of the Chest.

Coughs of the most obstinate kind are speedily overcome by it, and where a simple cough is very prone to develop into serious inflammation of the Lungs, the early use of Dr. WISHART'S PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL is earnestly recommended, as it invariably prevents the further progress of the disease.

Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Torpidity of the Liver and of the Kidneys are promptly overcome by this superb vegetable corrective, which not only regulates but strengthens the organs of digestion, as well as those of the urinary and biliary secretions. It imparts unwonted relish for the food, and, by promoting digestion and assimilation, enriches the blood, which is the natural motor of vital energy and nutriment to the system.

Dr. L. O. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial thoroughly regulates the Bowels, removes Blind and Bleeding Piles, banishes from the circulation dropsical and all other impurities, and effectually counteracts a tendency to Gravel. It also entirely obviates the weaknesses incident to females.

Dr. L. O. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial is no mere placebo. It is a standard medicine, and has been generally recognized as such by the press and members of the medical profession, who emphatically endorse the popular verdict long since rendered in its favor.

Doll Lore.

A woman's little girl not only does not make her doll's clothes, but she actually puts out her washing! She knows nothing of the delight of the doll's laundry-day, with the drying-lines stretched across the inside of the kitchen door, and the steam of the private Italian iron with which nurse got up her caps. If she has any imagination, and has been given a very splendid specimen of the modern doll, she is rather afraid of the brilliant waxen lady in a Worth costume, tied back, and flounced, with piles of golden hair, and face marvelously molded in the last fashionable expression of irritation or ennui. This is not a person to be patted off to sleep upon one's pillow, propped up on the table while one is learning one's lessons, or surreptitiously dipped in the nursery bath. Of grand dolls of this kind it may fairly be supposed that they are more blessed to the giver than to the receiver, and that the former is one of the wealthy bachelor, god-papa order, whose intentions are good, but whose domestic education is imperfect. They are beautiful objects in shop windows, and they faithfully represent every fashion and every frill of dressmakers. But what healthily constituted child, with brains, would really care to have a friend of a skating-rink, with the examples of rinkers, in correct attire and the daintiest miniatures of Pimpkin's skates, moving mechanically over the floor? Such a lay-wonder is not a fit companion for a child, wondering admiringly at the pitch to which high art in dolls has been brought, but a little doubtful whether they were not a pleasanter to their possessors in their lower estate.

The most intelligent child with whom the present writer is acquainted has attached herself with unwavering constancy to a gutta-percha doll, whose original costume was exceedingly limited in extent, and who was introduced to her as "Grandma." The young person in question was not quite up to dressing her new acquisition, she was called out to undressing her, which she did, reducing her attire to the prettiest-ribbed stockings and smart-shoes, which she could not take off because they are integral portions of Jemima's gutta-percha legs. The love of that child for that doll is curious to see. No toy, however admirable in mechanism or art, has my chance against Jemima; even the whiskers and the tranquilism of a gutta-percha policeman, colored with an almost painful brilliancy, have displayed themselves in vain rivalry. Jemima's mistress inaugurated their mutual relations by biting off Jemima's nose, thus rendering her horribly like a mutilated Montenegrin. This apparently satisfied her wish to learn what Jemima was made of, and ever since she has been convinced that her doll is charming and beautiful. She sleeps with Jemima, she intrusts Jemima for brief, privileged intervals to the care of highly-favored visitors, she shares her meals with Jemima, and if she permits her attention to stray into other channels for a while, she sits on Jemima, in order to keep her safe and have her handy, as Dickens describes the selfish old man at the sea-side reading-room sitting on one popular newspaper while he reads another. Jemima never was handsome, she is now most unprepossessing; but she possesses two attractions which, in the belief of the present writer, would outweigh in a child's mind the charms of the grandest doll in our shop-windows. She is flexible, and no one would dream of locking her up, and only giving her out to be played with "when little people are very good."—London Spectator.

Funny Scene on an Accommodation Train.

A very amusing incident occurred on a Fort Wayne Railway train Saturday afternoon. Just before one of the accommodations pulls out from the Federal street station a well-dressed, respectable-looking individual, slightly the worse for a little "tiff," entered one of the cars and finding a lady on it was seating part of a seat and said:

"Madam, is this seat taken?"

The lady very pleasantly answered, "No, sir."

"Madam, may I set thee it down?"

"Yes, sir, you may."

The lassy individual took a seat and in a few moments the train started. He sat seemingly contented and happy for a few minutes. All at once he threw his arms about his fellow traveler and kissed her vehemently several times.

Several passengers in the crowded car at this became greatly incensed. The fellow kept up his loving method of procedure and the lady appeared to be resisting him as best she could. Finally a number of the more determined of the passengers made a simultaneous bounce for the lassy man. One individual raised a window, and it looked as if the fellow was going to hunt terra firma when he suddenly seemed to take in the situation.

"What does yi chief you fellows want?"

The only answer was a more determined effort to lift the speaker out of the window, and for the occupant of the seat turned and took part in the conversation—

"Gentlemen," she said. "This is my husband."

"Oh—"

The man and his wife had entered the car before any of the other passengers and had not noticed the fuss which ensued. When he returned, feeling very humorous, he addressed his partner, in such a tone that everybody could hear him, as though she was a stranger, and that's what fooled them.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

An Unfortunate Somnambulist.

Tommy Harrison walks in his sleep. He is ashamed of it, but he can't help it. He was born at Last week Tommy changed hear the crowd, securing a nice set of rooms at the Oliver House. Thinking that perhaps as the last, room and furniture were all new and strange to him he might indulge in his propensity for nocturnal perambulations, he called to his mom just before retiring the colored porter, who plays with the seven-story trunks and makes impressions with board-bill forgetters. To this individual, who stands just seven feet high in his stockings, he explained the whole matter, and thanking him a dollar bill said: "Now, Charley, just you keep an eye on my room during the night, and in case you hear me moving about inside, come in, shake me a little, I'll awake, and then everything will be all right." The porter said he understood, and departed. Tommy undressed, turned out the gas, threw open his window and jumped into bed, and was soon sound asleep. Meanwhile the man wanted in the hall outside of door No. —. But not a sound was heard. About half-past twelve o'clock the air blowing in through that open window in Tommy's room became so uncomfortable that Tommy awoke shivering like a frozen chipmunk. Seeing the cause of the difficulty he sprang out of bed to close the window, and in doing so tumbled over a chair. That was just what the porter had been waiting for. With one bound he was in the room, and seeing a form outlined against the window, he made a grab for it and caught it with a grip of iron. Tommy yelled with pain, and told Charley he was awake, that it was all right, he wasn't walking in his sleep. But Charley wouldn't have it in that way. He tripped up the unfortunate somnambulist and threw him on the floor with a thump that rattled every bone in his body. Then he sat down on him and began shaking him, by thumping his head up and down on the floor. In vain Tommy insisted that he was not asleep, and had not been that night—the man kept right on. Every time Tom made an attempt to get up he put his knee on his chest and pinned him to the floor, all the time keeping up his shaking process. At length, all tired out, Tommy remained perfectly still, and the porter, supposing by this time that he was quietly slumbering after his attack of the jim-jams, placed him on the bed and retired. The next morning that colored porter came to Tommy and asked him for another dollar on account of the trouble he had in getting him out of his fit.—Toledo Blade.

An Affecting Reunion.

Tuesday morning David Barber, West Bloomfield, Oakland County, called at the Grand avenue police station and said that he was in the city for the purpose of finding a dog which had been stolen from him two or three days previous by a colored man who was at work for one of Mr. Barber's neighbors. The officers at the station took a description of the dog and promised to try to find him, and Mr. Barber left, saying that he would stay in the city until his search was successful.

Saturday morning Mr. Barber returned to the station apparently very much discouraged, and had been there but a short time when he saw Reynolds, the colored man from the avenue leading the lost canine. He arose quickly and stepped to the front door, where he stood with tears in his eyes, watching the approach of the dog, who, when within about one hundred feet of the station, saw and recognized his master. With a powerful and lightning-like spring he broke away from the cheer, and the next instant master and dog were showering each other with all manner of affectionate caresses, totally unconscious of the presence of a dozen officers. When the meeting had resolved itself into comparative quiet, it was seen that not only were tears coursing down Mr. Barber's cheeks, but the dog was actually shedding tears of joy.

Upon being questioned as to the reason of his extraordinary affection for a dog, Mr. Barber related the following story:

Three years ago this dog and my boy, then three years old, went together to Straight Lake, a short distance from my home, and while there my boy clambered into a boat that lay upon the beach. In their sport, the boat became free and floated away with the boy. The dog did not see the boat and its lead until quite a distance from shore, and he immediately jumped into the lake and swam after him. He was none too soon, for when the boat was about twenty rods from the shore it capsized, and the boy was thrown into the water. He had sunk twice when myself and several neighbors who had gathered on the beach saw this dog seize the boy by the shoulder in such a way as to hold his head high above the water. Then he swam toward us. He approached steadily, but we became impatient and waited not as far as the stranger, and that's what fooled them.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Remarkable Exits from Life.

When he (William the Silent) felt himself dying, "Holland's greatest warrior" sent for two clergymen of the opposing religious factions and bade them argue which of their creeds was the right one. "I see well enough, said the hardened unbeliever, when they had finished their discussion. "I see there is nothing certain except matters of faith." With that he turned his face to the wall. He had ceased to live. A remarkable dependence upon the certainty of matters of faith, and yet a remarkable carelessness about the certainty of mathematics, who lived in Pavia toward the middle of the sixteenth century, and who may be better known to students as the discoverer of "Cardan's suspension," having died on the day of his death by various calculations, starved himself to death for fear that his prediction would not be verified, and that his beloved science might suffer in consequence thereof. This might be called being imbued with the spirit of the thing; but I think that my next example goes a step further still. Michael Bruder, celebrated commentator on Lucretius," says Voltaire in his Dictionnaire Philosophique, "wrote on his manuscript, 'N. B. I must hang myself when I have finished my commentary.'" He kept his word, in order to end his days like his author.

Changeaux, the secretary of Rivarol, during the French revolution of '93, innocently asked when he had heard his death sentence whether a substitute would not do. Andre Chenier did not trouble himself so far. Perceiving his friend Roucher, the author of the "Months," a poem not unlike Thompson's "Seasons," he apostrophized him quite cheerfully by reciting the opening lines of the first scene of "Andromache." After which jocked silent until they arrived at the Barriere du Trone Renverse, near which the guillotine was erected. The hideous cart was met by a flock of sheep just entering Paris. It brought to the young author's mind the seventh Eclogue of Virgil, which he chent with "Tityrus," "Corydis" corrected Roucher. His companion did not answer until they had mounted the scaffold, when he softly approached Roucher and tapped him on the shoulder. "You were right; I forgot that summer was feminine in Latin."

That Montaigne should get up in his dying hours to pay his servants their salary, for fear that his heirs might neglect it or dispute the amount, is not so wonderful, knowing what we do of the man and his principles; but that one of his very opposite should have some thoughts for his creditors after he should be gone is rather surprising.

Vaguius, author of the "Demarquesana in Grammaire Francaise," a not very strait-laced personage, did so, however. Notwithstanding his ample pension, he was loaded with debts to that extent that he no longer dared appear in the street in the day-time, but only went out at night, a proceeding which gave rise to his friends calling him "The Owl." This condition of things made him very uneasy, as was proved at his death in his will. After having disposed of his wardrobe to satisfy all outstanding claims, he adds with perfect frankness and bonhomie: "But as there might still be left some creditors who cannot be paid, even after everything is sold, in that case the last thing that shall be sold will my body to some surgeon at the highest price that shall be paid for it, and that the amount shall be applied to the liquidation of those debts which I may still owe, so that I would be sure that, if I have not succeeded in being useful during my life, I may be at least so after my death." I wonder whether he ever heard Boileau's lash being detained by his creditors.—Temple's Magazine.

Curious Law Cases.

The English brethren seem to be continually getting into the strangest difficulties and trouble, and some of the cases that find their way into their courts are very amusing to us lawabiding Americans. Recent English papers furnish some very pointed cases for illustration.

A lad was brought before a London court for wilfully destroying a pan of milk by placing a live frog therein. He was fined one shilling. The pan of milk was restored, in which the frog was living with great apparent enjoyment. The Judge remarked that a prosecution for diluting milk might be made with success, and Mr. Frog gunmoved as before.

In Liverpool a policeman was arrested for poaching, and excused himself by saying that he had been led away by bad company. There is no defense was a pork-butcher furnishes better one. When arrested for exposing for sale an unsound ham he averred that he had been grossly imposed upon by bad cold, and consequently had lost all sense of smell. The Judge couldn't see it in the same light and fined the prisoner two pounds six shillings. Mr. Finch, a constable of Birkenhead, sued a Mr. Wright for twenty pounds damages. Plaintiff swore that while removing Wright's goods under a bill of sale defendant openly abused him in the presence of a crowd. There were three counts to the indictment. First, calling him a "mighty tight screw;" second, calling him a "rascal;" third, calling him a "thief." Plea of not guilty entered. The Judge ruled that the language in the first count was meaningless and would go for nothing if proved. Testimony showed that the language named in the second count was intended for some one else, namely, the landlord, of the third count defendant swore that he only said Finch was "no better than a thief." Judgment for plaintiff in twelve shillings. Costs on Wright.

But the best case of all came up in a Lancaster court. Thomas Dun sued a Mr. Bible for fifty pounds. Plaintiff testified that last February he fell into the canal, and that the following day of his death by various calculations, starved himself to death for fear that his prediction would not be verified, and that his beloved science might suffer in consequence thereof. This might be called being imbued with the spirit of the thing; but I think that my next example goes a step further still. "Thomas Aldobrati commentator on Lucretius," says Voltaire in his Dictionnaire Philosophique, "wrote on his manuscript, 'N. B. I must hang myself when I have finished my commentary.'" He kept his word, in order to end his days like his author.

A LAMP TO THY FEET AND A LIGHT TO THY PATH.

A lamp in thy feet—and a splendor
Lighting the hills afar;
Not radiance—flame and tender—
Of moonlight, or glimmer of star.
All around may be shrouded in shadow
And flames—and mist of the night,
But he is ever nonwards or nearhow
Before on the path that is light.

See it, lit with the glow of the morning
Flooded with sunshine sweet!
Not even the faint gleam of the dawning?
Nay, only a lamp in the feet!
If all the long road sin-hill's whiteness,
And wife gulfs smiled to the day,
Should we never sniffily on in the brightness,
Of finger and down by the way?

He knoweth, who, guiding the stranger
Safely in darkness and fear,
Has hidden the glory and danger
Alike from our wandering sight.
He knoweth, who, walketh before us
Bearing the glimmering lamp,
How somber the shades that hang over us,
How we shiver and shrink in the damp.

For His darkness are with the deeps
He fast are his ways and vast
As, wearying under our burden,
He treads in our pathway there.
Though He hangs light one step and onenly,
There is the mark of His foot in the mud,
Though He is not seen in the mirror,
It rests in the bosom of God.
Mary Anne Hitchcock, in Christian Union.

The Awfully Profound Minister.

He deals in metaphysics—talks about the laws of perception, the system of consequences, hypothesis, germinate theories and apologetics, and he can't believe can hardly see then hand before their face. He has a learned way of clearing his throat, a learned way of emphasing his pocket-handkerchief. I have heard him cough until I could hear the echoes of the ages. The audience does not know what he is talking about, and hesdoes not know either. The only logical part of his sermon is when he gets through. Now, when men are genuinely learned they are simple in phraseology and manner. I never knew an exception to that. But a fellow who has just enough learning to make a man swell beyond all reasonable proportions. Oh, drop your sesquipedalian phraseology, and use short, sharp, plain words. Don't write words as tall of water twenty feet deep, so clear that if you dropped a silver half dollar to the bottom you could see it. And there is such a thing as being learned and yet be of the same time. An Englishman crossed the Channel to France, and was exceedingly disturbed by the fact that he could not understand a word of the French language. He met at the depot a Frenchman and the driver of the cab talked to him in French. When he got to the hotel he found nothing but the French language there; and a man, who spoke English language, took him to bed at night, and he was almost exhausted because of his incapacity to understand anything that was being said to him, and in said he waited to sleep. In the morning he woke up and heard the chamber-cheer crow, and he said, "Thank goodness, there's some English at last." And what a relief it is, after hearing as some men talk to learned technicalities, forgion to our capacity, to suddenly hear something the plainest people can understand. I know only one time for words, and that is to let men know what you mean.—Christian at Work.

Conceptions of God.

It is not to be supposed that God manifests himself to all ages or to all men of one age in the same manner. He speaks at sundry times and in divers manners. He works by diversities in the domain of grace no less than in the kingdom of nature. But often the difference is more in us than in Him. Though he is ever near and acting in his own person, he is judging a horse in the head, came very near starting a runaway. Several more enthusiasts joined in the game, until about a dozen were down about the box in a furious state of excitement, vociferating wildly and laying heavy sods on the duck, while the old man was making a bee-line of speed at most astonishing rate. Finally a man who had made several close calls on the duck laid aside his coat, and, as he grabbed the sticks, threw was a fire in his eye which evidently meant business. Carefully gauging the distance, he waited until the duck (somewhat emboldened by its successful escape) was looking to one side, and then let fly the stick, the butt end of which hit the fowl square in the head, causing him to hang his neck over the side of the box and die.—Virginia City (Nev.) Chronicle.

OWOSSO, Mich Nov. 20, 1876.

MR. SENTINEL.

Dear Sir, I've bin biling and sloping all over for quite a time, to rite you, and give you and your respected readers some little of the knews which has bin accumulaten for some length of time in this growing and interesting point in the county of Charlevoix; but modesty, and a reluctkence to appear in the publick print, has kept me back till now, from fulfilling this pleasing dooty.

I will now Mr. Editor, try and give your respected readers, a little of what has bin transpiring among and around us quite recently.

The first and one of the most prominent questions, that has com up for the consideration, and decysion of our citizens, has bin the interesting one, of making a change in the name of this young and thriving village. Therfor in order to ackomplish this dessired result, a meetin of some of our citizens was had, and they resolved, that in order to promote and extend the rising fame and illustrkion of one of our most gifted young citizens and to render some slite tribute to her name for her anious exertions, both recently and fidelity, in bringing to perfekshon and publick use, for the benefit of our rising insertomtions, and the world at large, what is not inaptly turned the "Bestest Back Action Ballot Arrangement" recently all political parties are profoundly interested, and all numbers and week ones will be enabled to hold there own if not know.

This is an entirely knew and invalishable invention and is confidently reckomended for practical use by some of our prominent citizens of religious prejudyices and some others likewise.

I will endever Mr. Editor to give your readers some few of the reported good qualities of this univalishable invention, but it does away with all sich old fogee notions, as one 2's Daylawl and some other encyent but dessessed persons had and published to the form of books, in regard to sutch matters as Dyvision, Multiplycation and Subtrakkion, inasmuch as theese claymed that 2 and 2 made 5, and that 3 and 3 made 6; which proposition is now reseved not korrect, and also that 3 times 3 made 24 and sutch like, which knotions have bin handed down to us by our ancesters, and resolved by them, and es as trooths until this time. But let the dead trooth prevale' let who will step down and out, say we.

But the grate achievement of our young and talleated fellor citizen does away with all their obsolate notshons of our ancesters and is being adopted for its yoostility by the gifted inventor, and also being reckomended by some of his townsmen of the reform persuasion, and some other of our citizens loudly and konklusively proves the fact, that Mr. Daylawl and the other worthie ancyents, who made books concerning figures are not at all relyable.

For instance, this grate invension will foolly proove to you (skeptics) and did do it at our last election, that Mr. Daylawl was wrong entyrely. For this grate Okshun Brothers of a fox brout out the astounding fakt, that had been hid for ages, and exhibited the same to the public, thus 2 and 2 always made 2 and that 3 and 3 made 2, and 3 times 3 made 16 dec., and soon to the astouishment of us awl. Therefore for this valuabel improvement in the mode and manner of conducting elections and the yoonniform results produced thereby induced a few frens of this grate boon to the publik to call a meeting of the citizens, where adopted:

1st. Resolved yoonanimously that it is the opinion of this meetin that our distinguished young and gifted fellor townsmen, the inventor and owner of the "Patent Back Action Ballot Box arrangement is entitled to our warmest thanks and admyrashon.

2d. Resolved yoonanimously that this reesten in consyderation for his unyealing efforts in the past to promote the interest of us all, and for his encouragement in the future do recklomend to the citizens of the village the classyfing of the name of the same to the honest and one one of Odrosd.

3d. Resolved yoonanimously, that the following partition to our Leggeslayter be sycculated among our townsmen for there signatures and crosses, in order to akomplish this desyrabel chsynge.

To the Riverside and interior Leggeslater of the State of Michigan

Your partishoners all good and true citizens, and legal voters of this place being desyrous of choosing the name of our beloved village in the manner prescribed and plesing one of old wood present this partishon to hear thereof kindly for sanktion of the sayme, and we will ever pray.

Now you see Mr. Editor and respected red fraid how things are grasping in this little town, and being desyrous of confining some of the grate blessings that wee are engoying, on other towns in our county, who may not be engoying the same to an equal degree.

We would most cordially envite them to kum of us, and for there benefit we leve ush thus far.

Yours permanently

THE affectionate estimation in which the brilliant is held by the party in power can be judged from the fate of Mr. Kellogg. Mr. Hubbell, whose forte seems to be lying and whiskey drinking, is considered a more fit person to represent the people of this district than the soldier or "sacrificed lord clerk, whom we sold butter," to quote the words of our Representative.—Traverse Bay Progress, (Rep.-Dem.)

The affectionate estimation in which people hold the vital questions now before Congress forbids that they should send men to Congress on the sole consideration that they carried muskets in the late war, or because they happen to be good honest fellows. Weightier considerations than these should govern our choice—for men who have got to contend with pent up treason almost ready to break forth again. And this is why Hubbell has been sent back.

THANKSGIVING PARTY.—The young folks have made arrangements to give a dance at Newman's Hall on the evening of the 30th, and a glorious time is expected. The Charlevoix cornet band have been engaged to furnish music. A general invitation is extended to all.

THANKSGIVING.—In the midst of all the excitement and uncertainty of the Presidential contest, we are called upon to give thanks, and Thursday next is the day set apart. The Presidential complications do not hide the fact that we as a nation have much for which we have reason to be truly grateful. A generous Providence has during the year given us bountifully of which is necessary to sustain life and promote happiness. With unfeigned sincerity we say "Give thanks unto the most High!"

Mr. Fox is getting out his usual quantity, as is also Mr. Meech, of Norwood. Our other merchants will handle wood somewhat. War Threatening.

The address from Russia one are more threatening than ever, and it would seem that war between Russia and Turkey is well nigh inevitable. A special from Pesth, dated Nov. 21, to the Paris Temps, asserts that Russia is determined on war, and that the Czar will invade Turkey upon the slightest violation of the armistice. All though Russia active military preparations are in progress, and the semi official Russian journals, as well as the Russian press generally, are daily full of long, warlike articles. The Czar, while professing to be desirous of peace, seems determined to insist upon demands upon Turkey which the Porte will not grant, and according to the London Times' Vienna correspondent, "will insist, as a sine qua non upon the provisionary conference being held, without any Turkish representative being present, until all the powers shall have agreed upon a programme to which the Sultan will be presented only to say yes or no." To this humiliation Turkey without consent, and thunderbolts and shrouds" will not unlikely be next in order.

OUR "EASTERN POSSESSIONS."—The large tract of territory attached to this Township on the east and north, since coming into market and settlement, has been a source of considerable expense to the Township, in the urgent needs which have arisen for public roads therein. It may seem to some unjust that such should be the case, but we view the matter differently. 1st. The law contemplates giving every man highway facilities. 2d. The primary and all important consideration in the development of a new country is the opening of proper highways. 3d. We consider the opening of most of these roads as a direct benefit to Charlevoix, inasmuch as they render a large tract of farming country tributary to this place. We have reason to believe that Commissioner Newman has exercised wise discretion in the performance of his official duties.

THE BAND.—At the last meeting of the Charlevoix cornet band the following officers were elected:

Leader—W. A. Smith.
Deputy Leader—Jacob Steed.
Treasurer—W. C. Newman.
Secretary—Jay Worthington.

The following resolution was adopted by a unanimous rising vote.

Resolved.—That the thanks of this band be tendered to Mr. E. Carpenter our ex-leader, for the energetic effective and highly satisfactory manner in which he has discharged his duties.

We wish to add that the organization and success of the organization is due to the persistency and commendable stubbornness of Mr Carpenter in overcoming the difficulties which have presented themselves to the band and its leader Charlevoix has a musical organization of which it may well be proud, and if any one man is "to blame for it" that man is E. Carpenter.

THE NEWS.

AT HOME.

The Centennial Exhibition was formally closed on the 10th, President Grant and members of the Cabinet participating in the closing ceremonies.

The paid admissions to the Centennial Exhibition on the 14th were 15,425, and the display could be seen with more comfort than before the multitudinousness of the Exposition. The dismantling of exhibits had begun, but as yet had not much interfered with sight-seeing. Several of the State buildings had been sold and would soon be removed.

The cases against the members of the St. Louis whisky ring, who turned State's evidence, were nolle prossed on the 12th.

Frances H. Morrison withdrew his suit for $50,000, brought against Mr. Beecher for malicious prosecution, on the 14th, in consequence of the decision of Judge Westbrook, granting defendant a change of venue to Delaware County. It was announced from New York on the same day that all litigation between the parties was ended.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The following are copies of dispatches sent at about noon on the 19th by President Grant:

> Gen. W. T. Sherman Washington: Intercept Gov. Angier B. Harris, to be Signed with the horse at his command to preserve peace and good order, and to see that the proper and legal boards of canvassers are unmolested in the performance of their duties. Should there be any grounds of suspicion of a fraudulent count on either side, it should be reported and described in order that such matters may be fully investigated, so that the will of the people may be fairly and fully expressed, but that no fraud be consummated or placed there to stand. Either can afford to be disappointed in the result. The country cannot afford to have its vital interests by a suspicion of illegal or false returns.

> U. S. GRANT.
> PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16, 1876.

To Gen. Sherman, Washington:

Send all the troops at your disposal that he may direct to Louisiana, to Columbia, South Carolina and Florida. Also one company to Vicksburg, Miss. Let the whole force at his command be concentrated at the capitals of the States actually cast. The order to be taken from South Carolina shows there is reason to suspect all outbreak there. The presence of citizens from other States, I understand, is to intimidate citizens to vote. Let the Board of Canvassers make a full count of the vote actually cast. Let it be so kept that representation and fair men of both parties will see it.

U. S. GRANT.

Four companies of troops had left South Carolina for Tallahassee, accompanied by Gen. Ruger.

Several of the leading Northern gentlemen requested to be present at the counting of the votes in Louisiana arrived at New Orleans on the 15th.

At Columbia, S. C., on the 14th, a motion was made by the Democratic counsel before a full bench of the Supreme Court, praying that a writ of prohibition and mandamus be granted restraining the Board of State Canvassers from exercising judicial functions in the election of Electors, members of the Legislature, members of Congress and Solicitors, and confining them to ministerial functions only, and mandating Dunn, Cardoza and Hayne, candidates for Comptroller, Treasurer and Secretary of State, and nominees for re-election to these offices, from sitting as judges of their own election. The court issued a rule requiring the Board of Canvassers to answer on the 16th why the rule should not be issued. The Board of canvassers had decided themselves that they had no jurisdiction over the election.

Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, and lunacy in question was raised respecting them.

The visiting Democrats at New Orleans, who were there at the request of the National Committee, on the 14th sent a communication to the leading visiting Republicans in that city, asking for a joint conference, either by personal attendance or through sub-committees, "in order that such influence as our possess may be exerted in behalf of such a canvass of the votes actually cast as by its fairness and impartiality shall command the respect and acquiescence of the American people of all parties."

Gen. Sheridan and staff arrived at New Orleans on the 18th. The situation in political affairs remained practically unchanged, both parties claiming to have carried the State on a fair count. It would probably be several days after the convening of the Returning Board (on the 16th) before any thing definite would be known as to the final action of the Board.

Dispatches were received on the morning of the 16th from leading men of both parties in South Carolina and Florida still claiming those States for their respective tickets.

At Montreal, Canada, rumors of a Fenian raid prevailed on the 13th, and the Dominion Government was collecting troops to meet the anticipated invasion.

Accounts to Constantinople telegrams of the 14th the Turks were persuadable that the Russian demands in the forthcoming conference would be unshakable—that they were vigorously preparing for war. Numerous torpedoes had been placed in the eastern entrance of the Bosphorus, and the guns about Constantinople greatly strengthened.

St. Petersburg dispatches of the 14th say the Czar had ordered the formation of six army corps, and had placed the whole under the command of the Grand Duke Nicolas, his brother. Large quantities of war material had been purchased at Berlin.

Warsaw (Poland) dispatches, received in London on the 15th, say a Polish paper was indicted. The authorities had proclaimed a state of siege and prohibited the gathering of people upon the public streets. The Golos, of St. Petersburg, announced that all Russian railway companies had been directed to place their lines at the disposal of the Government for the transportation of troops, and that the exportation of horses from Southern and Western Russia had been prohibited.

Despatches of the 16th say that Russia, Turkey and England were actively making preparations for the conflict, which was deemed inevitable. The Pallsh contingent of the Russian army had been rigorously filled, and would be removed from Poland as soon as seemed. In England military preparations were being vigorously prosecuted both at the arsenals and naval stations. It was believed through out Europe that the coming conference would prove a failure so far as the settlement of affairs between Turkey and her revolted provinces were concerned.

The Manchester, formerly the Russian steamer City of Manchester, was lost, with nearly all on board, during a recent voyage from London to Calcutta. Thirty-two persons perished.

Hamilton & Co., colliery owners, of Manchester, England, failed on the 16th. Liabilities $600,000.

The Attempt to Steal the Remains of Abraham Lincoln.

An attempt was made at Springfield, Ill., on the night of the 7th, to steal the body of President Lincoln from the monument near that city. The following particulars of the attempted robbery are given in a special from Springfield to the Chicago Tribune:

Somehow or other, no one exactly knows how, J. C. Power, the custodian of the Lincoln monument, became impressed with the idea that there were designs upon the remains, and he communicated his suspicions to Leonard Swett and Robert Lincoln. Col. Swett wrote Col. Stewart, of this city, about two weeks ago, requesting him to station a guard at the monument. This was done, but no one came to disturb the corpse. Detective Tyrrell, of the United States Secret Service, whose headquarters are in Chicago, having business here, was requested by Swett and Lincoln to see Mr. Power, and to look around here, and watch for suspicious characters. He arrived here three or four days ago, and at once commenced a vigorous shadowing of several of the small rascals, but he saw no one whom he recognized. This afternoon Mr. Power came into town in a hurry and hunted up Tyrrell and informed him that a very hard-looking case had been out to the cemetery looking around, and he felt assured that they were there for no good purpose. One registered as from Rankin and the other from Kenosha, Wis. Their names are suppressed, since they have had nothing to do with what occurred later. Another visit, of course, he made to find out who they are; should they prove to be innocent injustice would be done them by telling their names now. Mr. Power, not being used to detective work, could give but meager descriptions of them. The result of the interview with Tyrrell is unknown, but he must have concluded that election night was an excellent one in which to rob the tomb.

This evening's train brought from Chicago ex-Chief of the Secret Service Elmer Washburne, who, it seems, had been requested by Swett and Lincoln to come here and aid Tyrrell. About half-past six Washburne, Tyrrell and three other men went out to Oakwood and concealed themselves in Memorial Hall, inside the monument, to await developments. One man was posted in the labyrinth in the rear, so called because of the walls running in different directions and making numerous passage-ways. Rose walls supporting the terrace. His object was to hear the noise made in the vault, if any were made. After patiently waiting for nearly three hours, and when about tired out from standing still, the utmost silence being imperative, he heard a grating noise which lasted perhaps five minutes. Then, in a little while, came several successive thuds, as if some one was hammering. The time having arrived for action, Washburn and his men hurried out of the door, with pistol revolvers in their hands, determined to shoot to kill if any resistance was made. Just as they were turning the corner to the left one of the men accidentally exploded his revolver. The noise was very loud, so still were the surroundings, and, intermingled, it was too loud, for, though there were but 12 shots fired in a group, when the echoes got to the door of the vault the dastardly villains were gone. They must have had some one watching to give the signal of danger, for they had come outside for a breath of fresh air, and heard the snapping of the cap and ran into the woods which surround the monument. It is but a short distance, and a man could get within shelter and be undiscovered in a quarter of a minute. The men at once scattered and went in the direction that the shots had gone, and while dodging around the trees two of them exchanged shots, each mistaking the other for one of the fugitives. After shooting at each other, they cried "Wash," "Wash," indicative of a friend in such an emergency, and then they found out their mistake. The bullets whizzed close to both, and it was miraculous that they escaped injury.

No traces of the thieves being discovered, the party returned to the outwoods, and there beheld a sight which made them sad. The body, as is known, perhaps, is enclosed in a lead casket. This is surrounded by a cedar case, and the receptacle of these is a marble sarcophagus. The latter has a double lid, the upper one not being as large as the other. Both had been pried off with a chisel or axe, and somewhat chipped in the operation. The under lid was laid on one side on the casket, the head-piece on the floor, and the upper lid standing against the wall. The casket itself was pulled out about a foot from the body of the sarcophagus, and a small piece had been taken off on the foot. Everything was in confusion

A CITIZEN of Sacramento, Cal., has invented a contrivance for the safe transportation of domestic animals destined for the markets. It consists simply of a short netting spread over a wagon-frame, resting upon the stanchions. The legs of the animals pass through the meshes of the netting, they cannot rise from it, and are transported securely and without suffering. The inventor asserts that his contrivance does away with the necessity of tying the animals, and allows them to be fed and enjoy plenty of water thus avoiding all danger of smothering or wounding—and also prevents the pain which follows tying and disfigurement of the cuticle. It is alleged that even hogs will not attempt to break through the netting, and that it can be made to secure them as effectually as a board pen.

M. SKALWEIT writes to a German naturalists' journal that last summer he observed a wasp flying about a writing-desk near an open window. There were some steel pen-holders on the desk, and the wasp went into one of the tubes. It soon began to bring in small caterpillars, bubbling each in with earthy pasts till the tube was full. In one cell an egg was deposited. M. Skalweit took away this holder and put another in its place. This was likewise filled by the wasp, though a rainy weather and at night the window was closed. Four holders were thus filled, tipening the holders at the end of August M. Skalweit found the larvae grown and the caterpillars consumed. The wasp in question was the odynerus parietum, which usually constructs its cells in old lime-pipes, hollow plant stems, old walls, etc.

A PAPER lately read before the Society of Public Analysts in Glasgow, Scotland, cites experiments which go to show that the enameled lining of iron pots is sometimes acted on by acid fruits, salt and other substances used in cooking in such a way that large quantities of lead and arsenic are dissolved and mingle with the food. Enamel taken from new pots made by as many different manufacturers showed that all contained arsenic, two contained lead, and a one per centum solution of citric acid boiled in the third roughened and destroyed the enamel at once, dissolving enough lead to give a dense black precipitate with hydrosulphuric acid. The highly basic character of all the enamels renders them peculiarly susceptible to the action of even feebly acid solutions, and consequently wholly unfit for use in cooking food.

A Fortune Lost in Litigation.

ON Monday last James H. Elmore, once a wealthy citizen of Queen's County, L. I., was taken to the Pondkeepsie Insane Asylum a helpless lunatic. This case is another illustration of the folly of litigation, and of the reverses which men of property contend with. Ten years ago Elmore had a bank account of $200,000, and was the owner of many choice bits of real estate. He owned a magnificent country seat at Richmond Hill, near Jamaica, and was beloved and respected everywhere. His bosom friend was Aaron A. Degraw, with whom he was associated in several enterprises, and among others in an unfortunate speculation of running a horse railway between Jamaica and East New York. Subsequently they quarreled, and went to law to settle their quarrels. This commenced a litigation which cost Elmore his entire fortune, though it has not yet been concluded. Degraw got the upper hand of him somehow, and Elmore in carrying on his lawsuits has sacrificed all his estate. His domestic troubles, added to his other difficulties, proved too much for him. First, his wife died. Then two of his children. Then another son left a lucrative position to take care of his father; but some weeks ago this boy was killed on the Pennsylvania Railroad track in Jersey City. He has one son left, a minor, who has a residuary interest in one piece of property through his mother, but it is heavily mortgaged, and may go with the rest. Recently he has shown signs of decaying intellect, until at last his insanity was too evident to be doubted. Weighed down by troubles, this man, only lately, as it seems, the possessor of a half million, is now an inmate of a lunatic asylum. —N. Y. Cor. Chicago Tribune.

The Effects of Hallucination.

IT is curious to note the slight point upon which a human mind hangs in the balance of reason. A man having all the appearance of perfect sanity have been known, as suddenly as a flash, to develop traits of lunacy. In other instances, a chance assumption of rank, kept up from day to day, has marked a veritable belief. The fiction worked upon the brain until it became a fact, most difficult to reconcile with hallucination.

A remarkable instance of such imagination is recorded in the life of Curran, the Irish barrister, who, with his gay companions, was in the habit of spending a day in the Dalkey Islands, and indulged in the frolic of electing a "King of Dalkey and the adjacent islands." A gentleman of middle station in life, a quiet, well-behaved and convivial man, was elected to fill the throne. He entered into the joke and enjoyed the pastime. A journal was kept called the Dalkey Gazette, in which all public proceedings were recorded, and which was a source of constant amusement to its supporters. But at length the mock sovereign, in which all public proceedings were recorded, and which was a source of constant amusement to its supporters. But at length the mock monarch, by his affected loyalty, and assumed homage began to tell upon and excite the imagination of "King John;" as he was satisfied. Fiction became reality. He fancied himself "every inch a King." His family and friends, in dismay and grief, saw the delusion assume such a hold upon him that nothing could shake it; he spoke on no other subject save his Kingdom and its government, and delighted to dwell on the various projects he had framed for the benefit of his people. He never could divest himself of his regal pomp, and exacted the utmost deference to his royal authority. When the last hours drew nigh, on returning gleams of reason broke upon his mind; to the moment of death he believed himself a King, and all his cares and anxieties were for his subjects. He spoke in high terms of the officers of his mimic court; recommending the care of his kingdom to them until his successor was chosen, and dismissed himself with a dignified calmness well becoming the last hours of a puissant monarch. When he came to relinquish his crown, he said, with tears, "I leave it to my people, whom I have so loved." His feelings were gratified, up to his death, by thinking of the good of his fellow creatures, which seemed, in his madness, in his sane life, to be a prominent feature of his disposition.

Hydraulic Practical Jokes.

WHEN Catherine II. and her successors assumed themselves at Peterhoff, the water-power was taken into service to play practical jokes on ordinary people, which cannot all be called enjoyable. In one retired nook there stands a gigantic mushroom, large enough to have a bench around its stem. As soon as anybody undertakes to seat himself upon it the water streams out of the whole periphery of the spreading top, enclosing the captive in a splashing cylinder. To rise again stops the flow of water; but people have not always the presence of mind to think of that. In another secluded spot there is what is called the "Lovers' Seat," and here I came upon a poor boy in rather a disagreeable plight. Under a spreading elm, the branches of which are artfully interwoven with water-pipes, there stands a bench, just wide enough for two, with a bed of flowers in front, which contains some artificial and some natural shrubs and two huge cast-iron thistles. Some funds-loving individuals had enticed the boy to sit down there, and turned on the water, which was pouring over him from all directions, from the branches of the elm, the back of the bench, and from every branch and thorn of the shrubs. It must be an ardent love, indeed, that would survive such a douching. In the boy's case there was no tender flame to overcome, and he bounced from his seat with a yell and fled across the park, his cowhide boots causing sad havoc among the flower-beds, while his dripping garments scattered blue plenty of elbow-room wherever he struck a gaily-dressed crowd.—St. Petersburg Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Fancied Slights.

THERE is a class of persons in every circle of society who, among the many grievances that they have to bug, find one other one that affords them more comfort than all the rest, that affords them positive pleasure, you would say, to see the eagerness with which they grasp it—the pleasure of being "slighted."

These persons are always on the lookout for a slight; they scent it from afar as the vultures do the carcass of the dead camel; and it is hard to say when they are best pleased, whether in inspiring a sense of triumph when courted or flattered, or in nursing the sense of martyrdom and burning wrong when overlooked and forgotten. They imagine the slight and believe in it, when it does not exist; and when it is really impossible to believe in it, content themselves by plotting what the case would be if it did exist, and suitable emotions are kindled in their breast, and they have the dramatic species of pleasure nearly the same as if it had been founded on fact.

Perhaps it is their friend who has "slighted" them, omitted the personal mention of their name from some general invitation, forgotten to some person to send them cards at all, inadvertently turned the back upon them in the crowd, accidentally carried off a sutton, and accidentally wraps them in a triumphant glance of coldness, distrust, icy discomfort, stalk upon the scene, to be followed after a time by a sort of slurred-over forgiveness that circumstances, whether of affection or convenience, make necessary. But perhaps it is not their friend, but your friend, that has done this deed; and woe is you for the distress and annoyance that then becomes yours through the agency of the individual whom your friend has outraged, until fresh outrage wipes out the memory of the old one.

To be slighted—that gives one an opportunity for eloquence in stating the reasons why one should not have been slighted, or else for assumption of humility in stating the reasons why the slight was not undeserved. It gives one the opportunity, too, of feeling an old grudge with the indulgence of a righteous indignation called for by self-respect, or nourishing a hearty spite by the recital of an piquant scandal concerning the giver of the slight that otherwise it might not be permissible to recite, or else of a lofty show of magnanimity by merely hinting at the knowledge of such scandal, and withholding all such scandal, and withholding all such scandal, and withholding all

James Tate, the U. S. Attorney General, has issued the opinion that the holding of a federal office on election day does not disqualify an elector, provided such elector resigns his federal office previous to his receiving the certificate of election.

Hon. Twing has arrived, and is easily returned to his old quarters in Ludington street jail. It is now almost a year since he made his escape. The story of his wanderings, and his fruitless attempts to place himself beyond the reach of punishment, have been already fully detailed in our columns. His capture and return to prison is another striking triumph of justice—for which, however, no thanks are due to the Democratic officials of New York city or state.

The students' convention of Michigan voters in regard to the constitution of 1850 again shows itself. Says the Lansing Republican: "Returns from fifteen counties of liberty, Branch, Calhoun, Clare, Hillsdale, Ionia, Kalamazoo, Lapeer, Muskegon, Ottawa, and St. Joseph shows 5,041 majority against an increase of judicial salaries, and 4,004 majority against abolishing the anti-banking clause, but 1,838 majority in favor of changing the time of voting on amendments from November to April. The only amendment about which nobody cared seem to have been the most popular. We believe these counties are an index to the general result, and that our Circuit Judges are to continue half starved, and the anti-bonus clause is to stand as the constitution, although practically no carrier against liquor-selling."

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs is essential. To subdue them is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy function of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fortified.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the Regions of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Tumors, Ulcers, Swelling of the Glands, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have their great curative powers in the most obstinate and complicated cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Chronic, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Typesetters, Gold beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the bowels. To guard against any accident, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-Worms, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin, of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters. One bottle in such cases will convince the most incredulous of their curative effects.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many people, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicines, or vermifuges, no pretended remedies will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow

THE NEWS.

ELECTION RETURNS.

On the 17th the Democrats issued a pamphlet containing the address of the Republicans, in which they state that they were fully aware that the organization and action of the Returning Board of Louisiana were beyond any authoritative control from without, and that it would be the height of folly and arrogance on the part of those not citizens thereof to attempt to alter the laws of a State; but they had supposed, nevertheless, that there was an influence which might be rightfully interpreted, even by citizens of this Republic who are strangers in the State, and had taken it for granted that the presence of Gen. Sherman on the 23d was temporarily granted an order issued for by the Democratic managers, restraining the Governor from canvassing returns of the Electoral vote, or business like action by the Board till after the 5th. He and the Board till only its duty by certifying to the election of the Hayes and Wheeler Electors, and thereby securing the continued Edgefield and Laurens. The Governor does not admit the power of the Supreme Court to control the action of the Board during the time of its canvass, and he is certain that the Court less no power to extend that time. When asked whose wishes he had consulted in action of the Board, the Governor said he was not certain, but thought it might be the opening act in a large drama, in which the whole Nation might be called upon to take part. The same correspondent afterward saw Gen. Hampton, who took the matter quite coolly, saying he had no fears of the result. He also explained that the Board of Canvassers were clearly in contempt, and he had faith in the power of the Supreme Court to send a fair count. The Court issued an order on the 23d reconvening the Board of Canvassers. A member of the Board assured the correspondent he would obey it.

A Washington dispatch of the 23d says the members of the Cabinet were not disposed to talk very freely, believing that they would be called upon officially to advise the President as to his duty, when the question of recognizing Hampton or Chamberlain as the legal Governor is brought before him; but what few expressions were made left no room to doubt that the Administration fully ratified the step taken by the Returning Board in not complying with the orders of the Supreme Court to certify to the election of members of the Legislature in counties where gross frauds were said to have been practiced by the Democrats in order to secure a majority.

The Louisiana Board completed the canvass of three parishes on the 23d—Natchitoches, Lincoln and Iberville. The vote in the first-named parish was: Tilden, 1,761; Hayes, 2,069; in the second, Tilden, 1,493; Hayes, 94; in the third, Tilden, 957; Hayes, 2,257. At one poll in Natchitoches the Tilden ticket threw out 342 votes for three Republican Electors, and 178 votes for three Democratic Electors on account of informalities. The vote for the five Republican Electors in Natchitoches was 1,558. In Iberville the five Republican Electors received only 1,848 votes instead of 2,297, owing to the omission of names on the ballots.

The injunction case against the Governor of Florida was argued before the court at Tallahassee on the 23d. The decision would probably be reached on the 26th. There was some excitement in the city. It was generally thought the Governor would not obey the injunction if issued by the Court.

A St. Louis dispatch of the 23d says the State Board of Canvassers have completed their tabulation of returns for Presidential Electors, and find that, of a total vote of 350,583, the Tilden Electors received 232,487, the Hayes Electors 144,598, and the Cooper Electors 3,498. Tilden's majority over Hayes, 38,289; over Hayes and Cooper, 34,791.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24 1876.

Twelve months ago, nothing could I warn a town, the capitals of Europe parent in the city of New York were startled at the knock impolitely sharing of them out their moorings with Mr. Tweed.[illegible] Accord report on Thursday last the same sensational type was call ed into requisition to announce to the benighted town the return of the prodigal. If the end of the Ross Tweed journey did not close the interest in its beginning criminal, and as only by any means on account of its having impor tance, but simply because our general excitability has been worn out by the throes of the past few weeks. Quite thing successful was the arrival of transfer from United States to mu pal custody was offered in the mid erately well quiet manner possible. Th prisoner's appearance did not look im proved by the wandering and tra hardships which he is reported to have suffered while working herchandise and barchandise declared on the set which conveyed Lee from Ha He is thinner and paler, and has very much in flesh and muscle. He also wears the prevailing Canadian whisk but otherwise is apparently in about edly ready, as ready as that of the pare parcel despot of Tammany could wi be. Heavily reinforced guards ac co tering the jail was [illegible] While I thought I should have to come back here. The millions that Tweed stole, even if it could keep them, would be a mockery and temptation for the prisoner into prison or his relations. Pity.

How much of a moral any be drawn from the circumstance I am not prepar ed to state, but the fact remains that just as the ex-tiger of the city comes back to it in custody, the contingent it never receives the other heads of wa look from the heads of Cardinal Mallon key. The natural inference is that Mr. John Kelly, being quite happy from Mr. Tweed must have been sure thin one, and I rather think the is the case. At all events, little has ever been said against his personal honesty.

Miscellaneous current news worthy of chronicling is extremely scarce. The little fun we got out of watching for the Franklin is no longer available, and there is hardly anything to take us till time while waiting for the decision of election bar—of which John Morris say holds over a million dollars—that he has coolly loaned at four per cent. just to keep it from resting in his pocket till wanted—except the theatres. The great Martinez breaks of persons and which is dragging its slow and weari wiest quavery lengths through the Courts, and the near prospect of Thanks giving. Of the latter, more anon.

The week has been a rare one in the amusement world. First and foremost in the consideration of Barnum Barnum's magnificent series of concerts, the fa rore ever which has grown steadily from low [illegible] Her own cess, assured from her opening performance, is now achieved and her rank as tist as in almost every respect the greatest pianist who has ever visited this country. She has fairly carried New York by storm, crowded houses, floral offerings and rapturous applause testifying to the completeness of her triumphs. Her season here is almost half completed, and at its close she will depart on a tour of delight to the music lovers of other American cities.

Next in interest comes the return to New York of Edwin Booth, who under the management of his father-in-law Mr McVicker, has opened at the Lyceum Theatre for a ten weeks season, lo gining with "Hamlet," in which he was enthusiastically welcomed. At the Fifth Avenue also, Shakespeare reigns, the comedy farce of "Life" having been removed in the height of its success to make way for a gorgeous revival of "As You Like It," with Miss Fanny Davenport as Rosalind, and our recent Eng lish acquisition Mr. Coghlan as Orlando. This performance, beside being very strong dramatically, is worthy the era of accessory magnificence through which the city is passing, as that Miss Davenport's liberal attractions of mind and person are presented in a setting worthy of their splendor.

Then there is the entree of Clara Morris, who, as "Miss Multon" has won a place among young ladies [illegible] The Fair Orphans" on the [illegible] Lyceum. It is commencement to say that the last week in a great success.

And, as though the [illegible] were not enough, [illegible] Heller [illegible] are performing [illegible] and giving us new [illegible] tricks.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE.

Address of the Worthy Master The Worthy Lecturer's Report.

The following extracts are taken from the address of Worthy Master John T. Jones, of Arkansas, to the National Grange at its recent session in Chicago:

At the last session of this body several important amendments to the Constitution were proposed and subsequently ratified by the State Granges, of which proclamation was duly made.

As a part of the section and plan of the organization and the amount of the expenses for the session of Grand Burials, which it was our purpose to adopt, three years with semi-annual sessions, will be most valuable, but we have not yet been able to see a clear link in a system for the collection of which by our fellow-citizens had been the work of Herculean labor, requiring practical men, for the last two years, and the time which we have been able to order has been utilized in an effort in which we can earn compliment, but in which it may be thousands of counties and States have established in the various cities and Territories of the Union, with various methods of share capital, and the most successful offer business and in them economies. From Norwood.

We the undersigned Inspectors of the election held in Norwood on the 7th day of November A. D. 1876 do hereby certify that we did faithfully and honestly perform the duties of our office on that occasion according to the best of our ability, and that we did not any of us either see or know of anything in lawful being done, or which would in any way tend to implicate any one in fraudulent or illegal practices.

MR. EDITOR.

The above certificate of the Inspector of the late election held in Norwood is offered as a full and complete refutation of the various slanderous articles which have lately appeared in your paper.

I suppose however that the various insinuations of fraud are intended more particularly as a sly thrust at me, and for this reason I wish a few words with your readers in explanation of the facts as they exist. I have been waiting for some specific or tangible charge to be made, but have waited in vain, the parties who have thus come before the public with their insinuations merely wishing to cast reproach upon me in some way without exposing themselves to any punishment for their temerity. I do not wish to berate anyone, or deal in harsh or unwarranted epithets, but parties who already stand convicted by their own hand writing, of false swearing, it seems to me, ought not to expect people to have the most implicit confidence in their oaths afterwards. I of course do not pretend to say how anyone voted, but I certainly think it very unjust to undertake to thrust the charge of fraud upon me or anyone else by the affidavits of such men, or by the mere assertion of men who can neither read nor write. These parties now make their affidavit that they voted for J. E. Dixon, and yet before election they stated that the preferred to vote for Mr. Upright. Now when did they tell the truth? Who can tell? If they will lie at all, how are you to know when they tell the truth? Would they be likely to do violence to their preferences and vote for Mr. Dixon, especially when, even after the election they asserted that any man ought to be ashamed of having voted for John S. Dixon? Let every fair minded man judge entirely of the consistency of such men, and of the reliance which ought to be placed either in their statements or their oaths. I know that I am innocent of all the charges which by insinuation they are trying to thrust upon me. I know that the identical votes which were received were deposited in the ballot box, and no one dare assert that he can prove anything to the contrary. The evidence of the Inspectors of the election, whose business it was to see that everything was properly conducted, and who were in a position where they would be more likely than anyone else to see all that was going on expressly state that nothing of the kind was noticed. As for the stuffing out of the ballot-box during the adjournment at noon, I can prove by at least four or five good reliable witnesses that it was impossible for anything illegal to have taken place at that time as it was under their immediate eye during the whole time. I only ask that stern and impartial justice be done me, and I appeal to the citizens of this County to give me a fair hearing before passing judgement upon me. I can truly state that I have decluled to no unfair or dishonorable means during this whole campaign. I told no lies, neither have I berated anyone, nor do I intend to do so in the future.

It is useless to attempt to enter into the details at this time, but a full understanding of all the circumstances would tend to show innocence rather than guilt. If there is anything wrong the other members of the Board of Inspectors are as much to be blamed as myself, and for this reason I protest against this attempt of a few sworn and bitter enemies to cast the whole reproach upon me. I therefore appeal to all fair-minded men to suspend their judgement until some tangible proof is brought forward in support of these suspicions and insinuations of a few spiteful enemies. O. D. Woon.

New York Revisited.--From Rev. Geo. W. Wood.

BERGEN CO., N. J., Dec. 6, 1876.

W. A. SMITH, Esq.

DEAR SIR.—On revisiting New York, after an absence of more than five years I find more change than I expected. The express train on the Hudson River Railroad now leave the old creek at the Spuyten Duyvel, follow the left bank of the Harlem River, pass under one of the arches of High Bridge, and so on to the Fourth Avenue bridge, on which it goes across to Manhattan Island. The arch through which the track passes High Bridge is at the spot where was formerly a landing, which I once recalled (in boyish days) after a long, hard pull against the tide, and thought myself pretty thoroughly tired out, but the arrival of a steamboat at that moment, convinced me that I was still able to row vigorously until my host was out of the way.

The railroad in Fourth Avenue is now completely enclosed within brick walls, so that the streets cross it on bridges, except on the low flat between Harlem and Yorkville, where they pass under it. So trains can run at full speed in the city clear down to 42d St. as safely as in the country. As I saw the light iron trusses spanning the immense building from wall to wall, and support the spacious roof without the help of a single pillar. I was struck with the share that architecture enjoys in the progress of the arts. The ancients built edifices which have justly gained the admiration of succeeding ages by the grandeur of the design and the ability displayed in the execution. But they knew only one way to make a large building strong enough to bear its own weight; and that was, to build it massive. How to unite lightness with strength, was a problem which they never could solve. They took a step towards it in introducing the arch, but they appear not to have dreamed of the extent to which modern engineers have been able to apply it.

The Fourth Avenue horse-cars come into the depot; so the traveler can continue his journey down town without stoping out of doors. Instead of being stirred with the deafening clamor which used to assail the ears of the newly-arrived passenger, all is quite as at a Boston depot. Of course I expected to see this depot and the adjoining hotel, but was not prepared for the change in the city around them. It did not seem like New York, but some strange city. Where was Bull's Head? Where were the wide acres covered with cattle pens, where the stock pens where the stock trains used to disgorge the herds of cattle that vied with engine whistles in their discordant music? Where was Allerton's Tavern, the drovers' resort? In place of them, stately buildings of brick and stone, dwellings, great hotels, and and lofty churches. Only one little piece of vacant ground, and that mostly covered with grass. I began to think that instead of spending five years in Michigan, I had on some forgotten afternoon wandered into the cave of the Seven Sleepers, or upon Rip Van Winkle's mountain, and that a score or two of years had slipped by, while I was taking a nap. However, a visit to friends in 46th street satisfied me that I was in New York, and the 19th century was not gone. On going down town, found the city looking more natural. Yet some things even in the older portions looked unfamiliar. Madison and Union Squares have a new face, now that no fences separate them from the adjoining streets, and they are graced with new bronze statues—Lafayette on Madison, and Lincoln on Union square, opposite the equestrian statue of Washington. On the north side of Union Square is a picturesque pavilion for bands of music, and before it is a row of a hundred and fifty or more gas lights, a foot apart.

The Tribune building towers far above everything else in the neighborhood. The Post-Office building is finished, although it has an incomplete look for want of a lantern surmounting the dome. Workmen are busy putting a dome on the court house. The City Hall, once esteemed a noble piece of architecture, now looks small, sandwiched between the court house and post office, with the Tribune building on the south-east, looking benignantly down upon it, as if resolved to shield it from the cold sea breeze. The piers of the East River bridge tower above everything else with a massive grandeur worthy of Babylonian builders. The wire cables pass high above the roofs of the tallest houses, and are anchored far in the rear. But no Chaldean or Assyrian ever dreamed of suspending a bridge from two piers near half a mile apart.

To see the busy throngs in the streets, and the harbor swarming with boats and vessels one would not suspect that hard times were left here. But I have seen our signs of it, and that is the words, "To let" on stores and offices, with unusual frequency for this time of the year. I have seen a few whole buildings standing empty. Business men find it hard to make money, and the long sequence in which they are kept about the looking, presages the revival of trade. No one dares to risk his property in any enterprise, until he can see how the pendulum of reaction is going to turn out.

Yours truly,
GEO. W. WOOD.

GRAND BALL.—A grand ball is to be given at Dole Hall in this village on the Christmas eve, under the auspices of the Charlevoix Cornet Band. Supper is to be furnished at the Fountain City House, and nine best Cooper is expected to outdo himself. Great pains will be taken to furnish excellent music. Bill, $2.00.

MASONIC.—The following are the officers elected by Charlevoix Lodge No 282, F. & A. M., at their last regular meeting for the ensuing year

W. M.—W. A. Smith.
S. W.—O. S. Washburn.
J. W.—H. J. Stockman.
Sec'y.—A. E. Upright.
Treas.—Amos Fox.
S. D.—Byron See.
J. D.—A. McNeil.
Chaplain.—Rev. Wm. L. Tilden.
Stewards.—A. F. Myers, Tyler.—N. A. Balch.

They will be publicly installed at Fox's Hall on Monday evening next.

STATE LAND OFFICE.—The annual report of the Commissioner of the State Land Office is before us and makes the following exhibit concerning our county. There have been sold during the year ending Sept. 30, 1876, in Charlevoix county, 120 acres of Primary School land; 240 acres of Agricultural College lands; and 274 acres of Swamp land. There have been 1,251 acres of Swamp land granted to settlers for homesteads, and homesteads patented during the same period. Of vacant State Lands in the county there yet remains, of primary School, 2,880 acres; Agricultural College, 3,684.93. There are in the county 3,813.17 acres of vacant Swamp Lands and forfeited but paid lands which have reverted to the State, and are now vacant. There have been 2,024.79 acres of Swamp land licensed for the year ending Sept. 30.

HAYES AND WHEELER.

They Receive 185 Electoral Votes and are Elected.

By telegraph and mail comes the information that Hayes and Wheeler have received 185 Electoral votes, which elects them beyond a doubt.

The Returning Boards of Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina have, in strict accordance with the Federal and State laws, returned majorities for the Hayes electors.

The complications arising from alleged ineligibility of certain electors, has been overcome, and the votes have been certified to the Vice President by the proper authority.

The Democrats claim fraud in the count of States, and the House of Representatives hope, under the provisions of the operation of the 22d joint rule, which clothes either House with power to reject votes, to throw out enough to to throw the election into the House. But the Senate, on the 9th, sustained the decision of Senator Ferry that there were no joint rules now in force, by the overwhelming vote of fifty to four. No less than ten Democrats voted with the Republicans to sustain the decision, and only four against it, while thirteen were absent, some of whom must have "dodged." Thus the only leg upon which the Democratic plan rests, has been knocked from under them by a solid vote of the Republicans, and a majority of more than two to one of the Democrats voting, in the Senate.

Artillery salutes and illuminations are the order of the day and night in the principal cities, over what has settled down into a glorious triumph for Hayes and Wheeler.

THE NEWS.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The returns at the office of the Secretary of State of California give a majority of one vote to Pacheco, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Fourth District.

The total vote in Kentucky was 258,860. Of these Tilden had 160,445, and Hayes 98,415. Tilden's majority 62,030.

Tilden's official majority in New York State is 32,989. In Gregie, 85,183. In the former State Peter Cooper had 1,987 and G. C. Smith 2,959.

Jacobs, the Republican candidate for Delegate to Congress from Washington Territory, has a majority of about 300. The Territorial Council is composed of six Republicans and three Democrats and the lower house of eighteen Republicans and twelve Democrats.

A Grandstream Cipherdid in the New York Times of the 27th says the returns show that the vote for Hayes and Seltz in North Carolina would reach and probably exceed 100,000 votes—majority would reach 11,000 and Vance would run some 4,000 or 5,000 behind him. The Democrats were very much excited by the election of their ticket that came off Tuesday, and William H. Ellis—is eligible. He is one of the commissioners appointed by the Southern Claims Commission to take testimony.

The following is the result of the official count of the votes for President in Michigan: Hayes, 166,534; Tilden, 141,- 605, Cooper, 9,669 Hayes over Tilden, 25,493

The official returns give Hays 2,767 majority in California.

Tilden's majority in New Jersey, according to the official count, is 11,945.

The total vote in Kansas for President was: Hayes, 78,382; Tilden, 57,962; Temperance, 110; American Alliance, 12.

A special to the New York Herald of the 29th says that Thomas B. Keogh, the Chairman of the Republican State Committee, had filed a protest with Iowa Breden against an announcement of the vote of North Carolina for the Democratic Electors. He enumerated twenty three counties to which he objected on the ground of illegal returns. He claimed that the throwing out of these counties would, with the omission of eight more who not heard from, give the State to Hayes.

LOUISIANA

There were present before the Louisiana returning Board on the 26th, for the Republicans, Messrs. Stoughton, Van Allen, Wilcox, Kelly and Harker, and for the Democrats, Messrs. Palmer, Trenholm, G. B. Smith, Bigler and Jullian. After some other proceedings, the votes in the counties of De Soto, Bienville, Lincoln, East and West Feliciana, Iberia and Caddo and Sabine were announced from consolidated statements, the totals being 8,787 for Hayes and 10,755 for Tilden. The votes for these parishes were not counted, their being contests filed for a hearing the following week. The following account of the subsequent proceedings before the Board is given by the Associated Press:

"When the returns from the parishes marked contested were opened, the Democratic counsel were allowed to be present. The returns from De Soto Parish were brought in and contained in one package, sealed with wax When the seals were broken by members of the Board there were found inside the consolidated votes of the Commissioners, and also two affidavits. Attached to the returns were a large number of protests and affidavits The Secretary of the Board said the package had been received on the 26th last, and was entered in its receipt book at the returns, he said, had come by mail In the course of inspection it was discovered but one of the protests of the Supervisor and the General Assembly was dated Nov. 5, and was not in the file before the Commissioners of the Circuit Court. When called up to explain how a protest dated on the 5th could be found on the 26th, and get into a sealed registered package received by mail on the 26th inst., the Secretary said he had received two packages.

He was detected by one of the Democratic counsel present in the act of marking another entry on his book of receipts of packages received.

"After some delay another package was produced, and found to contain a consolidated statement of votes and Commissioners' returns, but no protests or affidavits.

The counsel of the Board were unable to explain the matter, and Senator Sherman, of the Republican Visiting Committee, remarked that there was no use in disguising the fact that the returns had been opened and protests inserted after the package of returns had been received.

A special dispatch to the Cincinnati Gazette explains as follows the question relative to the De Soto returns before the Louisiana Board:

"The returns were recopied for by the Clerk of the Board as having been made on the 18th inst. Sealed and in the same package was contained the affidavit of the supervisor of the parish, made in Orleans Parish, charging fraud and intimidation in the counties naturally opposed to a majority of the 28th inst., put into a package, which was sealed with wax, and received on the 26th, seven days before. The clerk promptly explained that he had received a package purporting to be the returns from De Soto on the 26th inst. The package was brought before the Board and opened, and was found to contain the returns of the Supervisor, but not accompanied by the additional affidavit. The package which had been opened was received yesterday, having been mailed to the Board on that day, and as having been retained by the supervisors for the purpose of attaching the affidavit. The package given up by return of the 18th tallied exactly with the return in the second package, and showed no tampering with the returns, and all the Reports as delivered are satisfied that there is nothing wrong in the transaction."

After some preliminary proceedings on the 29th, the Parish of Ouachita was taken up, and four negro witnesses were introduced in behalf of the Republicans, and were examined by the Board. Their testimony was as to alleged intimidation and outrages. One of the witnesses, named Eliza Pinkston, told a fearful tale of cruelty. She recited that her husband and one child had been murdered and a little girl seven years old was taken from the house at the same time and had not been seen since The witness herself had been a victim of extreme cruelty, and was unable to walk without help into the Senate Chamber Ben James, another of the witnesses, had been also terribly wounded

One of the parties mentioned as engaged in the murder of Henry Pinkston was arrested on the 29th. After the testimony of Eliza Pinkston His name is Tom Lewis.

Before the Returning Board on the 29th ult. Gov. Wells stated that the testimony in the contested cases cannot be closed by four o'clock on the afternoon of Dec 1. He said the Democrats could present two witnesses in the case of Ouachita. The Democratic counsel said they ought to be allowed three witnesses, the amount permitted to the other side, but Gov Wells limited them to two Charles Tidwell and J. T. Sloan residing in the Democratic side, giving rebutting testimony to that given by Eliza Pinkston. One witness was omitted that on the evening after the murder, Eliza had said to him that the killing was done by colored people. Returns from Vernon, Franklin and Livingston parishes were opened and laid before the Board. These three parishes were duly counted, and were recorded thereon. Three names are to be counted by Treasurer; T. C. Dunn, Comptroller, Ben William Stone, Attorney-General, H. E Burke, Secretary of State, and H. W. Purvis, as Adjutant and Inspector General. It is stated that the Secretary of State claims that the Board had not discretion to open the De Soto Court, and that the law was on their side.

The Board met on the 30th, a second witness, named J. S. Sloan was offered by the Democrats, who swore that he was a Democrat and knew Henry Pinkston. Pinkston was not much engaged in politics, and was never heard him talk much about political matters. About the killing fight with another negro named Black Brooks, about two months before his death, Brooks and Pinkston were friends of each other. Brooks was a turbulent, quarrelsome man, on the night of the murder, witness heard a gun soon a party of colored men on his house going down the road coming from Ouachita, he thought the last men at Ouachita was at 8 or 9 o'clock and ever had; did not see any wrong going on; he belonged to the Democratic party. After this witness had corroborated the East Baton Rouge case was called up, and the Board decided not to open the boxes from seven polls in which the Commissioners' returns and tally sheets had been locked up, and the Board proceeded to count the votes from the other parishes, where the vote of one poll was not returned by the Supervisor By this action the Democrats lose 1,400 votes in East Baton Rouge.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The South Carolina State Supreme Court on the 25th ordered a judgment of $1,500 for each and counties against which the Board of Canvassers to jail until re- lieved by order of the Court. United States Marshal Kellogg has been sworn for the State Board of Canvassers, during any attention of contempt, and asked and was granted the right to call to satisfy the Court. The Court declined to issue an order giving certificates to members of the Legislature from Edgefield and Laurens Counties, fused by the Board but stated that such mandatory relief obtain a copy of the record from the Clerk of the Court, which would be equivalent to a mandamus. The five members of the Board of Canvassers will hold their meeting, and were ordered thereon. There names are, as said, had come by mail in the course of inspection it was discovered but one of the protests of the Supervisor and the General Assembly was dated Nov. 5, and was not in the file before the Commissioners of the Circuit Court. When called up to explain how a protest dated on the 5th could be found on the 26th, and get into a sealed registered package received by mail on the 26th inst., the Secretary said he had received two packages.

He was detected by one of the Democratic counsel present in the act of marking another entry on his book of receipts of packages received.

After some delay another package was produced, and found to contain a consolidated statement of votes and Commissioners' returns, but no protests or affidavits.

The counsel of the Board were unable to explain the matter, and Senator Sherman, of the Republican Visiting Committee, remarked that there was no use in disguising the fact that the returns had been opened and protests inserted after the package of returns had been received.

A special dispatch to the Cincinnati Gazette explains as follows the question relative to the De Soto returns before the Louisiana Board:

"The returns were recopied for by the Clerk of the Board as having been made on the 18th inst. Sealed and in the same package was contained the affidavit of the supervisor of the parish, made in Orleans Parish, charging fraud and intimidation in the counties naturally opposed to a majority of the 28th inst., put into a package, which was sealed with wax, and received on the 26th, seven days before. The clerk promptly explained that he had received a package purporting to be the returns from De Soto on the 26th inst The package was brought before the Board and opened, and was found to contain the returns of the Supervisor, but not accompanied by the additional affidavit. The package which had been opened was received yesterday, having been mailed to the Board on that day, and as having been retained by the supervisors for the purpose of attaching the affidavit. The package given up by return of the 18th tallied exactly with the return in the second package, and showed no tampering with the returns, and all the Reports as delivered are satisfied that there is nothing wrong in the transaction."

After some preliminary proceedings on the 29th, the Parish of Ouachita was taken up, and four negro witnesses were introduced in behalf of the Republicans, and were examined by the Board. Their testimony was as to alleged intimidation and outrages. One of the witnesses, named Eliza Pinkston, told a fearful tale of cruelty. She recited that her husband and one child had been murdered and a little girl seven years old was taken from the house at the same time and had not been seen since The witness herself had been a victim of extreme cruelty, and was unable to walk without help into the Senate Chamber Ben James, another of the witnesses, had been also terribly wounded

One of the parties mentioned as engaged in the murder of Henry Pinkston was arrested on the 29th. After the testimony of Eliza Pinkston His name is Tom Lewis.

Before the Returning Board on the 29th ult. Gov. Wells stated that the testimony in the contested cases cannot be closed by four o'clock on the afternoon of Dec 1. He said the Democrats could present two witnesses in the case of Ouachita. The Democratic counsel said they ought to be allowed three witnesses, the amount permitted to the other side, but Gov Wells limited them to two Charles Tidwell and J. T. Several affidavits were presented by the Democrats before the Board of Canvassers on the 23d ult. in support of their claim of fraud in Caddo parish in Alachua County. The returns show 598 votes cast while the affidavits are that only 319 ballots were deposited in that precinct. The Republicans introduced counter affidavits from four of the parties—Moore and Dukes (two inspectors), and Belton and Webster (two members of the County Canvassing Board)—who had given the Democratic affidavits to the effect that such former affidavits were made under duress, fear or apprehension, and were false. The Democrats introduced a third affidavit from Belton stating that if he gave any second affidavit it was not responsible or in his true mind when he did so. He reaffirmed, in his third affidavit, the assertions made in his first. Other affidavits from citizens of Caddoville were presented to their effect that Belton was drunk during the whole day on which the second affidavit was considered. Relative to Baker County the Democrats produced an affidavit from the Clerk of the Court certifying that the returns which goes the Democrats majority of five majority was the true and only return from the county of Baker that it was the only one that he had been called on to certify to, or that was filed in his office, that he had never been notified that such a current return was made up, and that he had never been notified that such a current return was made up, and that he had left the state in it, as the law required he should have they are return had been handed to him with the request that he should not open it, as the Democrats would have the opportunity of comparing it with the original returns. The Republicans produced an affidavit from the Clerk of the Court certifying that the returns which goes the Democrats majority of five majority was the true and only return from the county of Baker that it was the only one that he had been called on to certify to, or that was filed in his office,

To the Editor of the SENTINEL.

NEW YORK Dec. 1, 1876

Thanksgiving in New York—Public and Private Appearance—Its Condition—The Value of a recent Bequest—Position—A Ghoul Case—A Mother-in-Law.

The annual American feast of fat things could not possibly be omitted from the Centennial calendar, and I have chanced to encounter two of the gluttonous days of every year. Never in the latter months has all holiday trade more promptly risen from its dull depression; never previously have the streets presented such a spectacle in its place as on Thanksgiving morning. A sort of quick pantomime was the performance. Vacation of the day was the watchword visibly pervading personal bearing and movement. The air of the day was over the town as the sun's glory through fine mist of frosty weather; a keen appetizing stimulant, like a breath from the ocean, was in the air. Perhaps one should attribute the gayest effect to the contrast with the dullness which had just settled upon the town, and the early morning throngs, which, as one may imagine, were very light and decorous.

At Ludlow Street Jail the inmates regaled in the traditional style. Mr. Tweed ordered and disposed of a ring dinner, and, contrasting his warm quarters with the discomforts of a life on the ocean wave, found abundant cause for jubilation.

At the Tombs the prisoners enjoyed extra fare. Woodward, of the Ring, who, like his confrères over in Ludlow street, is the guest of the city against his will, continuing to follow the example of his chief, refused to partake of his monte hospitality, but sent out for a sumptuous repast of which he partook in lonely state. I will remark here by parenthesis, that Woodward gives signs of turning state's evidence. If he fulfils these promises, look out for some rich revelations for in his discomfiture proof by the Tweed set and could probably bring to good sense who refuse to be prodded into position.

At the Newsboys Lodging House [illegible] and seven hundred orphans [illegible] were regaled with [illegible] and [illegible] cake by hearing [illegible] speeches [illegible] by [illegible] and [illegible] the memory of which will [illegible] through many a hungry day to come.

At the Little Sweepers Home [illegible] particularly provided for and at the [illegible] of the Juvenile Guardian Society, [illegible] hundred of the little ones were for the moment at least, made comfortable and happy.

That thereafter such things as these to record—and I have mentioned but specimens of the charitable outpour of the day—is in itself one of the most worthy returns of Thanksgiving. Such occasions and there are hundreds of them and women whose sensibilities the world is so apt, want and suffering in the lower classes, and especially among that great multitude of shoddy-ites who live into the waning days of misery and [illegible] which [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

In the rear of the residence of Mr. J. B. Teepel, of Detroit, rests a dummy elevator used to convey goods from the 2d floor below to the loft in the third floor. A few friends called upon Mr. Teepel the other evening when said artful old lady named Tozer, opened the door leading into the elevator under the impression that it was the closet, and stepped off. The effect produced was in the basement, and the poor creature fell to the bottom and was instantly killed. This incident was not known to the family until an hour after, when Mr. Teepel took his usual constitutional to enjoy a pitcher of cider. Then the corpse was found.

In the Seventh District, at the late election for Congress there had a majority of 2,691 in the Eighth District, the majority for Brodhead (rep.) over Pelton (Dem.) was 486. In the Ninth District, in all the counties except Ingham, Livingston, Oakland and Washtenaw, Hubbell's (rep.) majority was 3,433. The counties not returned in last substantially change the result.

At the recent election, all three of the proposed amendments to the State Constitution were carried by the following named majorities: Increasing the salary of Circuit Judges by $200 each, and that changing the time for voting on amendments from November to April by 27,000 majority.

Synopsis of Gen. Sherman's Annual Report.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.

Gen. Sherman, in his annual report to the Secretary of War, says:

By the assignment of Maj.-Gen. Schofield to the Superintendency of the Military Academy that Institution has passed from the command of Gen. Emory, and West Point has ceased to be a military department, and the Commanding General of the Army has no supervision of the duties and functions of such Commander especially to order general courts-martial, to approve and execute their findings, and to execute all sentences of courts-martial received by the action of the President and Secretary of War. The Military Academy, in relation to the world at large, is a purely scholastic and scientific school, should form the most liberal study, and the habits of the youth passed therein should be in every respect accordant with what appearance has demonstrated to be necessary for the efficient government of an army in the field.

Gen. Schofield says that the Academy at present has a population which will take for the school year of nearly 300 cadets, and the first educational establishment of the kind in the country.

The aggregate force of the army now consists of 25,811 men, all of whom are so advantageously distributed as to be available in the establishment of peace and the suppression of any organized resistance to the execution of the laws. The discipline and instruction of troops under the Military Academy at West Point, and the general progress of the troops in the several departments of the South, are highly creditable to the officers and men concerned. The ordinary duties of the troops have been satisfactorily performed, and the troops have been employed in the several departments of the South, and the troops have been employed in the several departments of the South, and the troops have been employed in the several departments of the South

Some of the best Democratic citizens of Charlevoix voted for Hayes and Wheeler and prosperity.

Republican tricksters were active. It is a humiliating fact that while Democratic voters in northern Michigan, on Democratic ground, with unanimity, the Detroit portions of the Southern field were to quickly polished by an inferior enemy, while in reality we had good reason for claiming the three hundred fifteen. Our Republican friends of the Democratic and Green, in fairness, which Republicanism has honestly cured the victory.

Hayes' majority in the single State of Iowa is larger than the combined majorities of Tilden in the four Northern States which he carried.

It is estimated that the furnace in this village consumes an average of 30,000 cords of hard wood per season, or in other words, it clears 600 acres of land yearly on entire section.—Tyner City Progress.

Norwood Dec. 20, 1876.

EDITOR OF SENTINEL.

A certificate signed by O. D. Wood, Amos B. Boggs and D. R. Bennett, stating in substance that they faithfully performed the duties of inspectors of an election, according to the best of their ability, and that they saw nothing that would implicate any one in fraud; is offered by Mr. Wood, as a non-political reputation, of all charges and insinuations, that have appeared in the Sentinel, in the last few weeks. If that be the best defense he has to offer, I think it a very weak one, and indeed, one of the bitterest disappointments to the Democrats in the last few years, that he did not come out like a man and say, and I care not how much fraud and crime was committed by my friends, I will not be a party to it, but will denounce it. Instead of this, they all stick by it, and will be equally responsible for it. Mr. Wood will pardon me for saying that I do not think he will be voted nothing for his services, for he could bring twenty men who would swear they did not get him to Detroit if I have not the least doubt. Mr. Wood can bring twenty men who would swear they saw nothing wrong and all thinks to assume and he is welcome to all the comfort he can derive from such evidence. In regard to the Inspectors of Mr. Wood will state that I have been personally acquainted with Mr. Boggs for the last 8 years, and that he is not only a man of the highest character for honesty and integrity, but is universally esteemed by his neighbors and friends. Good old Democrats, such as Mr. Boggs and he and as he and other citizens, his position to be taken with his own party.

In regard to the other Inspector Mr. Bennett, I would like to enquire if he was the party purchasing the ballots at the time he was back in the room engaged in the honorable business of voting. I met with Charlie Weaver in order to induce Weaver from voting for me. He said as much, but said time challenge of Weaver when he offered his vote on the ground that he had bet on the election and attempted to frighten him from voting.

If Mr. Bennett will turn to the Statutes in this case I think he will find that it is probably a fly threat at any rate, but I am safe in doubt his integrity. One of the other points I have not the least doubt, if Mr. Bennett will only refresh his memory a little, he will remember that he was not in the room at the time the ballots were counted, but was out in the street with Mr. Wood, and

THE NEWS.

ELECTION RETURNS.

The Electoral Colleges met at the capitals of their respective States on the 6th and cast their votes for President and Vice-President of the United States. Complications exist as follows:

In Florida, State Att'y Gen. Cocke, of the Board of Canvassers, refused to sign the certificates of the Hayes Electors, and entered a protest against the action of the other two members of the Board. He then issued certificates of election to the Democratic Electors, who met and cast their ballots for Tilden and Hendricks. The Republican Electors returned, as elected by a majority of the Board of Canvassers, and certified to by the Governor, cast their votes for Hayes and Wheeler.

In South Carolina the Democratic Electors met and voted for Tilden and Hendricks. The Republican Electors, under authority of the Returning Board and the certificates of the Governor, voted for Hayes and Wheeler.

In Louisiana the Republican Electors bearing certificates from Gov Kellogg, met in the Senate Chamber and a unanimous vote was cast for Hayes and Wheeler. The Democratic Electors, with certificates signed by John McEnery, met in the House of Representatives and voted unanimously for Tilden and Hendricks.

In Oregon, the Governor issued certificates to Odell and Cartwright, Republicans, and Cronin, Democrat. The latter declined to show his authority at the meeting of Electors, and the Republicans refused to recognize him. Cronin then elected J. N. T. Miller and John Parker Republican Electors, and proceeded to cast the vote, two for Hayes, one for Tilden. The Republicans organized Mr Watts recognized, and was at once reelected, and all their votes were cast for Hayes and Wheeler, which, with their sworn statement and copies of the steamer of the votes cast in the State, certified to by the Secretary of State with seal attached, were sealed and sent on.

In Vermont, Mr. Aldrich, the Democratic contesting Elector, appeared before the College, with counsel, and stated that he wished to take part in the deliberations, and to protest against Henry N. Sellers taking any part. Roswell Farnham objected to hearing outside parties, and the College proceeded to business. Mr. Aldrich offered his votes for Tilden and Hendricks, but they were refused. Five votes were declared for Hayes and Wheeler. Aldrich called the special attention of the Chairman to the fact that he had offered his votes. George Nicholas was appointed messenger to carry the votes to Washington, and was refused. He then appointed himself messenger, and signed his own certificate of his vote, which was in common form, and gave Nicholas notice that he should go to Washington at the same time he did and present his vote and fight it out in Congress. Aldrich has not been sworn to as an Elector.

It is claimed that Gen. D. W. Frost, one of the Democratic Electors in Missouri, is ineligible. On the grounds of this alleged ineligibility, Charles G. Stifel, the Republican Elector for the Third District, applied by letter to Gov. Hardin for a certificate of election, which was refused, the Governor stating that he had already issued a certificate to Gen. Frost. During the session of the College Mr. Stifel presented a communication setting forth Gen. Frost's ineligibility, and claiming the right to act as Elector from the Third District. This the College declined to have read. Subsequently George H. Childs, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, presented a protest to the College against the appointment of any person to act in the place of Gen. Frost, as being illegal under the laws of the State, also against Gen. Frost's substitute being allowed to vote or act as an Elector, as being ineligible and now legally entitled to such, and against the refusal of the College to permit Mr. Stifel to act as an Elector. This protest was laid on the table by a vote of the College, and the vote of the Electors for President and Vice-President was then taken in favor of Tilden and Hendricks.

The votes of the Colleges as claimed by the Republicans are as follows, electing Hayes by one majority:

STATES.	Votes.	STATES.	Votes.
California	6	Alabama	10
Colorado	3	Arkansas	5
Florida	4	Connecticut	6

Leaving out the contested Electors, the vote would stand 184 for Hayes and 185 for Tilden.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

On the forenoon of the 5th the troops were withdrawn from the doors and entrances to the State House, and the places of the sentinels supplied by special constables acting under the orders of Gov. Chamberlain. A large number of special Deputy Sergeants-at-Arms were enrolled and placed at the doors of the Senate and Republican House. The Senate and Republican House met in joint session and canvassed the vote for Governor and Lieutenant Governor. The County of Edgefield, which gave Hampton over 3,000 majority, and Laurens, which gave him over 1,000 majority, were prevalently thrown out, when the Democratic Senators retired from the hall. When the returns were canvassed, Lieut. Gov. Gleaves declared Governor and Speaker Mackey declared Chamberlain elected by 3,044 votes—it was expected that Chamberlain's would be announced on the 5th. The Hampton Legislature remained in session during the day. Their action was unprecedented, except that they gained two announcements from the Mackey House, making their membership sixty-two holding certificates of the Board of State Canvassers, and seventy, including the Edgefield and Laurens delegations, who hold certificates of the Supreme Court. Hampton spoke in the evening declaring that he intended to be Governor of South Carolina. In the Supreme Court argument was heard on the application for a mandamus requiring the Secretary of State to deliver the returns to Speaker Wallace, and the papers taken under advisement. Arguments on the pure warrant proceedings requiring the Hayes Electors to show by what authority they exercise the functions of their office would be heard on the 6th.

On the 6th, the Democratic House assembled at ten a. m. and transacted some routine business. A little before one o'clock a colored man named Hines appeared and took the oath, giving the Democratic House sixty-three members, and a quorum which they claim to be legal and Constitutional. The Republican House met at noon, and passed a bill allowing the Governor to be sworn in by any officer qualified to administer an oath. The Supreme Court decided that the Democratic House to be the legal House of Representatives, and would, it is said, issue a mandamus directing the Secretary of State to hand over the returns for Governor, etc., to Speaker Wallace.

Gov Chamberlain, on the 7th, took the oath of office as Governor, in the State House, before Probate Judge Hoge. The inauguration was over before it was known in the city, and only the parties admitted by the authorities witnessed the ceremony. Gov. Chamberlain delivered his inaugural, after which the Legislature adjourned. The Democratic House met and organized all acts passed by them, and finally sealed the Laurens and Edgefield delegations. A committee was appointed to inform the Senate that the House was ready for business, and to ask Gen. Hagar to remove the troops from the State House.

AT HOME.

The telegraph line between Cheyenne and Deadwood was completed on the 1st.

A fire occurred in New Orleans on the 1st which destroyed 112 houses, fifty of which were occupied by a hundred families who lost nearly all their effects and were left in a destitute condition. About twenty firemen were injured, several seriously. Value of property destroyed is estimated at between $300,000 and $400,000.

Charles B. Wilkinson, defaulting United States Revenue Collector at St. Joseph, Mo., was sentenced on the 1st to two years' imprisonment in the Missouri State Penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $8,000.

A Washington special of the 3d states that, in an interview on that day, President Grant said he did not apprehend any difficulty over the settlement of the Presidential question.

It was reported in New York on the 3d that Secretary Robeson had recovered the full amount of the $500,000 which it was said he had lost in the advance made to Jay Cooke & Co. as Government fiscal agents, just before the panic of 1873.

The monument of the printers of the United States to Horace Greeley—a bronze bust—was formally placed over his tomb in Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 4th, the ceremonies being participated in by Thurlow Weed, William Cullen Bryant, and other distinguished printers and journalists.

The military force under Gen. Crook left Fort Reno, on the morning of the 3d, for the junction of Little Powder River with Powder River, where they are expected to strike the hostile Sioux. The latest advices were to the effect that Sitting Bull had about 400 lodges, and Crazy Horse seventy—equivalent to a fighting force of nearly 2,000.

The Loudoun Returning Board declared the result of their canvass of the votes on the 5th. They give the highest Hayes Elector 74,756, and the lowest 74,040; the highest Tilden Elector 70,766, and the lowest 70,035. Tarbutt, Republican, for Governor, is given 3,426 majority, and the entire Republican State ticket is declared elected. Of the Congressmen declared elected, four are Republican and two Democratic. The State Legislature as returned is also Republican. A dispatch says these results were secured "by throwing out the parishes where great intimidation and violence existed, and also a few polls in New Orleans where frauds occurred."

Mrs. Irene House, who killed her husband, the noted New York divorce lawyer, some months ago, and who was subsequently tried and acquitted, has become insane and been taken to the New Jersey State Insane Asylum.

As Ginaia telegram of the 5th says Judge Savage had refused to grant an injunction to restrain the Republican Electors of Nebraska from casting their votes for President.

The cremation of the body of the late Baron De Palm, at Washington, Pa., was successfully accomplished on the 6th. A Pittsburgh dispatch says: "The body was on a wire cradle, which, when, in the retort, raised it about two inches from the bottom of the retort. The door was opened, and, as the body slid in, a flame of smoke from the burning evergreens rose from the body. A fainter odor of burning flesh pervaded the building, but no unpleasant feature appeared, and the process was pronounced a success in every particular. Observations every ten minutes discovered the fact that the remains rapidly shrank in size and passed away in vapor and gases. At the end of the first hour the bones crumbled, and the outline of the form was lost. At the end of the second hour, the body was greatly reduced in size, the larger bones and ribs only being visible, and they would apparently crumble at the slightest touch. At 10:45 the crib was moved back in the retort two inches, and the whole mass crumbled. Colonel Shoni then pronounced the incineration ended and complete, in two hours and twenty minutes."

On the night of the 5th at the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Theater during the performance of the "Two Orphans," a gas jet set fire to the wood work in one of the wings of the stage. A scene of great confusion followed, the large, and frightened audience frantically attempting to escape from the burning building. About 300 persons perished in the ruins. The building was completely destroyed.

The Florida Returning Board on the morning of the 6th made their report of the canvass of the votes in that States, giving Hayes 936 majority, and electing Stearns Governor, and returning both Democratic Congressmen as elected. The Legislature is Democratic by five majority on joint ballot.

Up to the evening of the 5th over 300 ladies had been recovered from the ruins of the Brooklyn Theater.

The residence of R. P. Schneider, near Sedalia, Mo., was burned on the night of the 6th. Two children, aged six and three years, perished in the flames.

On the night of the 6th, at Lawrence, Kansas, as Mrs. J. A. Gaskon was entering bed room, the lamp in her hand exploded. She was horribly burned, and died next morning. Her husband and son who came to her assistance were also frightfully, and probably fatally, burned.

John Morrissey has declared off all bets sold in his house on the direct result of the Presidential election.

A despatch to a Salem (Ore.) dispatch of the 5th, at a Republican indignation meeting held the night before, resolutions were passed demanding Gov. Grover take his action in the matter of issuing certificate of election to Cronin, (Democrat), and requesting the United States Senate to refrain from taking his seat in that body, to which he is elected, on the ground that he has willfully violated his oath.

Late Mexican advices say that Lerdo, lately declared President of that Republic, had been driven out of the City of Mexico by the troops of Porfirio Diaz.

According to late Japan advices a fire recently occurred at Kanagawa, which destroyed 700 native houses. A village in the province of Echizen had been destroyed by a tidal wave.

According to a London telegram of the 7th, Brent, the Louisville forger, had been held upon the charges of forgery and uttering counterfeit money, and would be handed over to the United States authorities after fifteen days. Winslow and Gray had disappeared.

St. Petersburg dispatches of the 7th say the Russian war office had forbidden war correspondents to join the Army of Occupation until it had crossed the frontier. The proposition to subject their reports to a species of censorship had been negatived by the Czar himself. The publication of the Russki Mir had been suspended for one month because of its disclosures of the composition of the army.

The European Plenipotentiaries held a preliminary meeting at Constantinople, on the 7th. Much patriotic excitement prevailed throughout Turkey, and the sons of the best families were enlisting in the Turkish army.

CONGRESSIONAL.

When the Senate was called to order on the 4th, the new members were sworn in, and the two from Colorado drew for their respective terms, Chaffee serving the long term, and Teller the short one. Resolutions were submitted by Mr. Edmunds, and ordered printed, instructing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to inquire whether, if no vote has been cast or accepted, especially in South Carolina, Louisiana, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, or Florida, and also as to the eligibility of Electors. A joint resolution was offered by Mr. Ingalls, and ordered printed, to memorialize a convention to be held at Columbus, Ohio, to propose an amendment to amend the Constitution of the United States. The opening bill was introduced by Mr. Hoar, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to inquire whether, if no vote has been denied

The Oregon Case.

We give elsewhere the statement of the Governor of Oregon as to his reasons for dealing with the electoral vote of that State in the fashion that he did. Instead of frankly admitting that he acted upon a variety of legal assumptions which he would not have followed for one moment if the Tilden managers had not deemed it indispensable to break the force of the casting for Gov. Hayes of 185 regularly certified electoral votes, he proceeds to putting the case as if there was really some delusion for his action outside of the party exigency. By so doing he proves himself to be a knave as well as an unscrupulous politician. To give our readers the exact measure of Grover as a public man and of his cypocrisy, we will lay before them so that they may compare with his statement the terms of the law governing this case, as we find them directly and succinctly stated in the columns of the New York Times.

The general law of Oregon (chapter 9, title 9, section 60,) provides that "the votes for electors shall be given, received, returned and canvassed in the same manner given, returned and canvassed for members of Congress. In regard to members of Congress, and therefore in regard to electors, it is provided (title 3, section 37) that "the Governor shall grant a certificate of election to the person having the highest number of votes," and section 40 is further provided that "in all elections in this State the person having the highest number of votes for any office shall be elected." There is no option or discretion allowed. The person receiving the highest number of votes for the positions of electors were entitled to certain certificates. The Governor has no power to refuse them. What are these certificates? Are they political papers given out to the citizens? Not at all. They are, in the language of the Federal statute (act of 1792,) "lists of the names of the electors certified." Such lists the Governor was required to give through the Secretary of State, to the electors on Wednesday. Gov. Grover deliberately violated this law. He prepared lists which were false in regard to one elector, and they were given out to the electors, not to a majority of them, but to Cronin, a private citizen, who was no more an elector of Oregon than he was an elector of Florida. In order to find Cronin, the Democratic elector, it was necessary for the Governor to declare that the regularly certified Watts the Republican, was void, and for such declaration to have any effect it was necessary that the Governor should be competent to determine the question "Did the laws of Oregon (chapter 14, title 9, section 49) declare that on the decision of a competent tribunal declaring void an election or appointment, the office of all become vacant." The action of the Governor, then, if he had any right to act at all simply created a vacancy, which the remainder of the electors, in the exercise of the power conferred on them by the law of the State proceeded to fill. Thus laws say, (chapter 14, title 9, section 50):

"If there should be any vacancy in the office of an elector, occasioned by death, refusal to act, neglect to attend, or otherwise, the electors present shall immediately proceed to fill, by viva voce and plurality of votes, such vacancy in the Electoral College, and when all the electors shall appear, or the vacancies, if any, shall have been filled as above provided, such electors shall proceed to perform the duties required of them by the Constitution and the laws of the United States."

This is precisely what the electors did. Their course was literally in accordance with the law, and the electors obeyed the law while the Governor defied it.

Our readers can compare Gov. Grover's statement with the provisions of the law and readily see how the latter were completely perverted and disobeyed by the Oregon executive. As to the falsity of Gov. Grover's claim that the "standard authorities" sustain his course we quote those extracts from the speech of Senator Thurman (the ablest Democratic lawyer in the Senate) in the Abbott-Vance contested seat case. Referring to the rights of the North Carolina Legislature, he said:

"Again, here is another thing that the Legislature of North Carolina has a right to know and that distinguishes this case from English cases, and that is, that the Weight of judicial decision in the United States is decidedly against the claim of a minority man to an election. That is an element wholly wanting in the English cases. In England the entire current of decisions was that the minority man could have the seat. In America the decided weight of judicial opinion—in her every case but one—forbid by a supreme Court is against the pretension of the minority candidate, and that the Legislature of North Carolina had a right to look at and to know their expectations upon whom they voted for Mr. Vance."

As to the law, Mr. Thurman spoke in the most absolute terms, and alluded to the decisions in the following words:

"Now, Mr. President, I desire to say a very few words upon the adjudicated cases. I affirm with the utmost positiveness that there is not a judicial decision of the highest court in any State of the Union, except the Indiana decision, that gives the slightest countenance to this claim of a minority man being elected, while it has been decided again and again, as I shall show, notwithstanding the criticism of my friend from Wisconsin, that the majority man is best entitled although the majority man may be under disqualifications. The only two decisions in America in favor of the minority man are the Indiana decision and the decision of an inferior court, a Common Pleas Court of the city of Philadelphia, which has been referred to, and that pushes his doctrine to its necessary logical consequence."

Finally, will our Democratic contemporaries moderate their shallow cavils now ever this performance sufficiently to give us their views as to their position in respect of certain outlined items of the Washington specials?

Suppose we, looking more carefully at the facts in the Oregon election, have perceived a first flaw to the Democratic case, and while that it is by no means certain that the returns opened by the President and Senate will secure a vote for Tilden. The Governor of Oregon issued a certificate that Cartwright and Odell, Republicans, and Cronin, Democrat, were the lawful electors. The certificate Cronin put in his pocket. He organized himself as the Electoral College, showed that he fill the two vacancies, put the vote to him said, declared it carried, elected two Democrats, and made up a return of one vote for Tilden and two for Hayes which he will bring on himself to Washington and deliver to the President of the Senate. The two genuine electors met, found a majority of the Electoral College present, filled the one vacancy, cast the vote for Hayes in accordance with the wording of the law, and made up a legal return to him. The President of the Senate will open both returns, he will find in the Republican one the certificate of the Governor. By this certificate he will learn who are declared to be the electors. He will then refer to the conflicting returns to ascertain which counts from a majority of the electors then certified to. That return he will proceed to count; the other will be treated as a nullity. There will be no power behind the certificate, because the certificate itself, however issued, which the Constitution and law. The circumstance that the certificate comes inclosed in the same return is not important. It is perhaps all the better that it should be so, for it exposes the fraud which it was hoped it would conceal."—Detroit Tribune.

Democratic Opinions on Count of the Electoral Votes.

It was probably something of a surprise to most readers that only one of the twenty-nine Democratic United States Senators voted last two twenty-second joint rule (positive to counting the electoral vote) was still in existence? But the fact is that a large number of the Democratic Senators took positions against that rule at the last session of Congress, and are obliged in consistency to maintain the same ground now. Moreover, they then argued very deeply that the duty of Congress in counting the electoral vote was ministerial. In the debate last session on Senator Merrick's bill to regulate the counting of the electoral vote, Mr. Bayard said: "Were the two houses of Congress ever intended to become the judges of the electoral vote of the people of this country? Apparently, by the Constitution, their duties would seem to be of a ministerial character. They were to stand by and witness the counting, and their presence in that way, as witnesses, was supposed to be a security." Mr. Whyte of Maryland was even more positive than Mr. Bayard. He said: "If refuge to the President of the Senate to count the electoral votes. I differ with the Senator from Massachusetts, when he speaks of the two houses counting the electoral votes. I differ with the Senators who doubt for a moment that our fathers meant to leave it in the power of the President of the Senate to open the certificates, to state the votes of the states, and to declare what the people had determined should be in the future their will. I am surprised that we should step here today to discuss the question of whether we have a right, by legal enactment, to take away from the people that power put in the Constitution of the United States for their benefit, merely authorizing the Vice President of the United States to enumerate their will." And, in response to a question from Mr. Morton, whether in his judgement the President of the Senate was vested with authority to pass upon the validity of contesting votes, Mr. Whyte responded: "I do hold the Vice President of the United States is the proper person to state who vote shall be counted, because the Constitution has put it in his hands." Subsequently he added: "It would be safer to leave a question of this kind in the hands of one man than in the hands of many. Divide the responsibility and it becomes so small, so infinitesimal that scarcely any man feels it; but center it one man of honesty and integrity, put him before the people, liable to impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors, hold him accountable for speaking the voice and will of the people, and my word for it, there is great protection to the body of the people than in a majority which are often more tyrannical than any single man." Mr. Stevenson, of Kentucky, referred Mr. Whyte as follows: "I concur in the able argument of the Senator from Maryland. I agree with him that the president of the Senate is the only officer selected by the framers of the Constitution, and named in that instrument as invested with the sole power of receiving, counting and declaring the votes for President, or certifying to the electoral college, and a decision on the result of that question.—Detroit Tribune.

DISEASES OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS, DYSPEPSIA, COUGHS, COLDS, URINARY TROUBLES, DEBILITY, PALPITATION OF THE HEART, TORPIDITY OF THE LIVER, CONSUMPTION, PILES AND FEMALE COMPLAINTS.

For nearly a quarter of a century this sterling preparation has been curing cases of the worst character, in which it is adapted, and it is now used by persons, of patriotic reputation, in all classes of society here and abroad. Wherever introduced it has given universal satisfaction.

As a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat and Lungs it is unrivaled, and a popularity rivalled by that of no proprietary remedies. Experience has shown that for those who are afflicted with weakness of the Lungs it is the best possible protective against Consumption, and it may be relied on with certainty to eradicate Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, Diptheria, and Soreness of the Chest.

Coughs of the most obstinate kind are speedily overcome by it, and where a single cough is very prone to develop into serious inflammation of the Lungs, the early use of Dr. Wishart's Pine Tar Cordial is extremely necessary, as it immediately prevents the further progress of the disease.

Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Torpidity of the Liver and other Stomach troubles are promptly overcome by the use of this vegetable corrective, which acts directly on the digestive organs, regulates but strengthens the process of digestion, as well as those of the urinary and biliary secretions. It purifies the blood, which is the natural nurse of vital energy and nutriment to the system.

Dr. L. O. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial is the best remedy for the Bowels, removes Blood and Kidney Piles, banishes from the constitution Rheumatism and all other impurities, and effectually counteracts a tendency to Gravel. It also entirely destroys the weaknesses incident to females.

Dr. L. O. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial is no mere stimulant. It is a standard remedy, and has been repeatedly recommended as such by the press and members of the medical profession, who emphatically endorse the popular verdict long since rendered in its favor.

Balance in the Treasury at the commencement of the year	13,491,551 88
Total	$288,114,611 08

The expenditures were:

For civil service	$17,233,718 93
Pensions	29,866,764 17
Indians	7,046,727 69
War Department, including rivers and harbors	39,578,088 04
Navy Department	15,870,599 52
Interest on public debt, including sinking fund	129,483,849 32
Total ordinary expenditures	$239,079,747 67
Public debt, being reduction of the principal	48,984,863 41
Total	$288,114,611 08

The receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, are estimated at $257,000,000, and the expenditures at $236,000,000, leaving an estimated surplus of $21,000,000.

The report of the Director of the Mint shows that notwithstanding the silver dollar ceased to be a legal tender after 1873, the amount of silver bullion coined from the 1st of January, 1874, to the 1st of January, 1876, was $8,031,000, and the amount of gold bullion coined during the same period was $19,961,000. The total coinage of the mints and assay offices during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, was $45,000,000, of which $39,000,000 was gold and $6,000,000 was silver. The total coinage of the mints and assay offices from the organization of the Government to the 1st of January, 1876, was $1,000,000,000, of which $600,000,000 was gold and $400,000,000 was silver.

The Secretary says that the amount of fractional currency outstanding is $15,000,000 less than the estimate of last year, and that the amount will be further reduced during the present fiscal year. He says that the amount of fractional currency is withdrawn, it is desirable to replace it with coin, and that the only reason why no further reduction has been made in the amount of fractional currency is because the Treasury has not been able to procure coin for the purpose. He says that the amount should be increased to the amount of at least $50,000,000, and recommends a legislative provision of not less than $1 and not more than $5 in amount, to be issued in exchange for fractional currency, and the coin thus received to be retained in the Treasury.

The report of the Treasurer of the United States shows that notwithstanding the issue during the year ending June 30, 1876, of $46,000,000 of fractional currency, the amount outstanding on the 1st of July, 1876, was $15,000,000 less than on the 1st of July, 1875. The amount of fractional currency redeemed during the year was $61,000,000. The amount of fractional currency received into the Treasury during the year was $46,000,000, leaving $15,000,000 to be accounted for as destroyed.

The report of the Register of the Treasury shows that the amount of registered bonds issued during the year was $1,000,000, and the amount of coupon bonds issued during the year was $1,000,000. The amount of registered bonds transferred during the year was $1,000,000, and the amount of coupon bonds transferred during the year was $1,000,000. The amount of registered bonds outstanding on the 1st of July, 1876, was $1,000,000, and the amount of coupon bonds outstanding on the 1st of July, 1876, was $1,000,000.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.

The report begins with a classification of the demands on the Department, which it considers under the several heads of pensions, railroads, public lands, Indians, education and the census, patents, and the general administration of the business of the Department. The Secretary says that the present pension laws are defective in many particulars, and that the system is liable to abuse. He recommends that the law be so amended as to require the examination of pensioners at the pension agencies, and that the fees of pension attorneys be reduced. He says that the number of pensioners is increasing at the rate of 20,000 per year, and that unless the laws are changed the annual expenditure for pensions will soon reach $40,000,000.

On the 9th, the Senate committee on Privileges and Elections resolved to send out communications immediately to Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina, asking for the investigations ordered by the Edmunds resolution adopted by the Senate. The following letters are the ones sent: To James Madison Wells, Stephen B. Packard, Samuel Lee and Michael Hahn, Louisiana; Marshall Twitchell and Wm. Woodruff, Florida; Daniel H. Chamberlain, Columbia, S. C. Each letter contains the following:

A NEW YORK dispatch of the 10th announces the appointment of the New York Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company, of New York, Brevoort Thayer Hastings, on the 10th, Brevoort Thayer Hastings, Rufus Kennan and Easton were appointed a committee to report upon a like committee on the part of the insurance employes of the House with reference to Presidential complications, and report what legal measures exist for adjusting the difficulties that may arise between the two branches of Congress in regard to the counting of the Electoral vote. On the same day, the Democratic caucus of the House of Representatives held a session of two hours, at which a determination was manifested to maintain what was claimed to be the constitutional rights of the House, and to give effect to the expressed will of the people at the recent Presidential election." Several members having had private interviews with Gen. Tilden are understood to have communicated to the caucus his views, to the effect that no action should be taken concerning the existing or possible future political complications until after the return from the South of the House investigating Committee.

SIX HUNDRED pounds of glycerine on board of a wagon near Petrolia, Pa., exploded with terrific force, on the 10th, tearing wagon and horses to shreds, and instantly killing Daniel Earth and Mr. Humphreys. The men were unloading the wagon, and it is supposed that one or more of them dropped a can.

THE JUDICIAL amendment was made on the 11th that the number of persons who lost their lives in the burned Brooklyn Theater was 295, of whom 268 have been identified. All but forty-two of the victims were males.

ON the 8th, the Comptroller of Accounts and Secretary of State of Florida, Messrs Gowgill and Mclain, were brought before Judge Whitty, at Tallahassee, to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt for continuing the canvass of the votes in that county, in violation of the order of the Court. They were granted until the 11th to make answer. On that day the case was again continued. The Clerk of the State Board of Canvassers, in a note dated on the 11th, denies that Atty.-Gen. Cocke had filed a protest against the action of the majority of the Board of Canvassers.

A CHARLESTON (S. C.) Associated Press dispatch of the 11th, says sixteen negroes had recently been arrested in Abbeyville County, upon the charge of embezzling and murdering two men near Lowndes ville. They were safely lodged in Walhalla jail, where one of them subsequently committed suicide.

A DISPATCH interesting to life insurance companies and policy-holders was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States on the 11th, in a decision in which where the terms of a policy secure the company from liability if the insured commits suicide, whether sane or insane, such exemption is valid, and the holder of the policy cannot recover.

THE Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service has succeeded in arranging with the Pennsylvania Railroad for the replacement of the fast mail.

A SCHISM prevailed in New York on the 11th, in which the Democracy had been defeated with Tweed and Sweeney to refund to the City of New York quite a large amount of money, and to receive in return immunity from prosecution. The compromise was thought to include Connelly also.

ON the 12th, the Colorado Legislature elected Henry M. Teller (Rep.) United States Senator for the full term of six years, beginning on the 4th of next March.

THE Republicans of Chicago, on the 12th, fired 183 guns, one for each Electoral vote claimed for Hayes and Wheeler.

Democratic and Republican addresses were issued at Washington on the 12th. The Democratic is as follows.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 11, 1877.

To the People of the United States:

The National Democratic Committee assembles at the request of the Presidential election held on the 7th of November, the choice of Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, as President and Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, as Vice-President of the United States. We congratulate you on the victory for reform. It now only remains for the two houses of congress in the performance of their duty, on the second Wednesday in February next, to give effect to the will of the people; there will be no constitutional authority for withholding the Electoral votes and counting a majority of a fraction thereof, as well as an overwhelming majority of all the people of the United States.

By order of the Executive Committee of the Democratic Party.

Signed, ABRAM S. HEWITT, Chairman.
Countersigned, WILLIAM H. BARNUM, Secretary.

The Republican address reads as follows:

An address to eight lies has been issued by the Democratic committee. It is the last desperate attempt to prop a tailing cause. Our lives have been taken away by a series of outrages of the most revolting character. Thirty-seven men, citizens of the United States, have been murdered in cold blood, and for no other reason than that they were Republicans. The purpose of the murderers and their backers is plain. They mean to overthrow the government of the United States by force, and to establish in its place a government founded upon the principle that might makes right. Their success in this purpose would be the end of free government and of all peace and security for life, property and character.

The murders in Louisiana and Mississippi have been perpetrated for the purpose of controlling the Presidential election. The murderers have succeeded in their purpose. Their victims are dead, and the result of the election is changed. Had the murders not been committed, the majority for Tilden would have been overwhelming. The murderers have therefore attained the object for which they murdered. Their victims are powerless to undo the work of their assassins. The murderers are masters of the situation. They have only to continue murdering Republicans, and they can make sure of the Presidency. Will they stop at murder? Will they hesitate to kill enough Republicans to make sure of the Presidency? Will they not kill enough to make sure of the Presidency, and enough more to make sure of the Vice-Presidency? Will they not kill enough to make sure of the Presidency, the Vice-Presidency, and a majority of the Senate? Will they not kill enough to make sure of the Presidency, the Vice-Presidency, a majority of the Senate, and a majority of the House of Representatives? All our readers will doubtless have been puzzling their brains [illegible] of the paper [illegible] Saturday [illegible] paper. The fact is [illegible] Press [illegible] Saturday [illegible] Monday [illegible] Tuesday [illegible] Wednesday [illegible] Thursday [illegible] Friday

The Brooklyn Calamity—Interesting Incidents.

ONE gentleman who conspicuously occupied a private box, with his wife, throughout the evening, at the first cry of fire abandoned his wife to her fate and sought his own safety in flight. He was saved, but his wife perished. This would be called unmanly under ordinary circumstances, but the testimony of many of those who were saved is that they had no knowledge whatever as to what they were doing from the time the terrible cry of "fire" was given until they found themselves in the street. Men were found bleeding from serious wounds who had no idea of how they got injured. So it is probable that the man in the box lost his presence of mind, for the time being, was as much out of his mind as any inmate on the theatre's second and lower floors succeeded in his action. Consternation seized on one and all upon the instant there was the flames blazing up among the scenery, which was highly seated, and it was simply instinct that taught most of them to fly to the street for safety. In doing so the ladies sacrificed their head-dresses, shawls and other outside garments, which appeared in front of the crowds, as they came out. Under such circumstances of unnerved terror, it would be cruelty to censure any one with intimacy.

A young lady of my acquaintance was saved by the coolness of her escort. This gentleman was one of the cleverest and whenthe alarm was given he said to her: "Keep cool, rely on me, and I will save you." He guided her into and through the surging crowd, till finally they reached the street in safety, but with their clothing torn into shreds. While pressing forward in the frantic crowd, the young man was conscious of stepping on a female form lying upon the floor and being trampled under foot by the mass immediately behind him. The prostrate woman was struggling, but in vain, to gain her footing, and crying frantically, "Save my mother." So guided was my friend that he clear-headed enough to succeed in rescuing the lady determined to rescue if possible, and after leaving her corner of safety in the street, he endeavored strongly to reenter the house. But as well might he have attempted to enter the crater of Niagara as to force his way through the surging mass of humanity that was rushing madly out of the theatre, where now you see yonder.

"Up, down at the c. g. in a little while."

"What do you mean by c. g.?" demanded the father.

"Why, corner gallery, of course.

"I see you have," mused the father, as he rose up. "You will p. d. m. please accompany me to the watchman?"

"Yes, I have, sir," mutted the lad, as he made off.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

THERE are one paper-mills in the country, valued at $80,000,000 of capital invested, with a total production of $70,000,000. These mills give employment nominally to 200,000 people, whose earnings are footed up at $50,000,000 annually.

THE "Little Wanderers" of Boston had a great Thanksgiving feast obtained in a novel way. Superintendent Tobin sent out 12,000 large papers bags and as many envelopes to the churches and Sunday-Schools of Boston and vicinity, with a request that they be filled with provisions and money. Every one of them was returned full. There were cart-loads of pies, cake, confectioners, etc., 150 barrels of apples, three tons of potatoes, one load of poultry, etc., and a portion of the money reveals $1,200.

NITRO-GLYCERIST, for instance as Strauft, Adit and Stollwage-Dutton, recommend either blue or blinding-grey smoke-colored glasses as a protection for weak eyes against the unpleasant effect of red, orange and yellow light. On the same principle the burning reddish yellow light of candles, lamps and gas in general eyes, as well as weak ones, can be pleasantly modified by the use of blue chimneys or globes, or at least of shades, for the reflection of the light, colored a light ultra-marine blue. A remarkably neat approach to a light as agreeable as daylight, is said to be produced by a petroleum lamp with a round wick and a light blue chimney of twice the usual length, the latter causing so great a draught that the petroleum burns with a nearly pure white flame.

THE first Pennsylvania Railroad excursion train for the Centennial grounds left Jersey on the 10th of May, and to-day we have despatched fully one hundred and fifty thousand people. We can read the terrible details of the life and death of a poor unfortunate without one heart-throb, but if a dozen or a score of us string ourselves on a thread of sympathy, our hearts melt like wax. Another question arises: Can the Pennsylvania Railroad Company long continue to run excursion trains at such a disastrous loss? Think of it! Twenty-two hundred and fifty cars were despatched. During May the passengers are placed at 300,000, and during the month of June, the number reaches 1,000,000. The greatest day's receipts came in on the 24th of October, when as 200 cars were transported over the road, and $53,000 were received for tickets. The company had to employ over 5,000 attendants, and was compelled to borrow cars from all other lines, many of which have been lost or returned.

DR. DUNLAP, who has recently come before the public in connection with the Slade case, records in the British Medical Journal another case of arsenic poisoning from wall-paper. The symptoms of the patient were serious, but not satisfactory, pointing to no cause, and not a diagnosis, until the patient mentioned that her husband was similarly affected. Another question revealed the fact that a bedroom was lining with light green paper, and, a sample being afterward examined, it was found to be highly charged with arsenic. It will paper makers will not take the hint conveyed by these repeated notices, which must have met their eyes, some steps must be taken to make them. Perhaps the best way would be to blow down wall-papers altogether; they are unhealthy, especially with arsenic in them, and melancholy form a resting-place for contagia. Exchange.

M. MAREY-GRAPH, of Paris, has invented an ingenious apparatus for enabling one to determine instantly the sense of an air-gun or pistol-shot, by pointing in its direction with the indicator provided for this instrument. The apparatus consists essentially of a tripod stand supporting a circular table, which may be inclined at any angle to the horizon. On the table is engraved a map of the stars, and the circumference is divided into degrees and the divisions of the year. From its center there stands up a column which, revolving about its axis and supported on top a pointer, has pasted on it movable about its center in a plane perpendicular to the table, with in a horizontal direction it carries a second pointer, fixed in the direction of the former, and therefore in close contact with the map of the stars. It results from this that when the upper pointer is directed on any star, and the table has been properly oriented for the day and hour, the lower pointer will then cover the star in question, and its name may be read off on the map. The utmost freedom and convenience. A lantern-slide, for instance, illuminates the chart sufficiently, so that the whole stand may be carried out of doors and used there with advantage. The inclination may also be employed for the inverse process—that is, for making exact observations of the sun, by observers of absolute time and azimuth.

A SEVERE criticism of the most thorough character into the external characteristics of dynamite have lately been made by eminent scientific men abroad, and are said to have proved that the article in a frozen state is as safe to handle and transport as in an unfrozen state—a fact which is of particular practical importance. In the first of these experiments, several cartridges, in a frozen state and in cases partly beginning to thaw, were thrown one by one upon the hard wall with great force, against an iron plate without an explosion. In the second experiment, a block of iron, of about 45 pounds weight, was allowed to fall from a height of about twenty feet on a light wooden box containing twenty pounds of dynamite cartridges in a frozen state, and with slight signs of ignition, but does not explode. The frozen dynamite, the explosion was therefore effected by inserting, in each heap, a small unfrozen cartridge, with an ounce of fulminate contained in it, and then firing this off by a Bickford fuse. The two heaps were exploded successively but the explosion of the first, though very violent, did not set the other off.

A Victim to Opium.

A CURIOUS city occurs in its lessons many a sad and peculiar case of suffering. Some are more striking than others, but men come and go, and we are none the wiser. The mere sine-movement of a death has continue more regards than the world has time to admit.

One of the saddest cases—and only sad, but unusually tragic—is that of Mrs. Isaac C. Perkins, three married, three deceased, and finally a pauper and a suicide. Mrs. Perkins was the corpse, and all owing to a love for the fatal drug—opium. Her history is an eventful one, with many romance and thrilling incidents, but only the saddest can claim. To add to the strange fascination which hangs over her career and its finale, she was a woman of rare mind, highly cultivated and well-to-do people. We can read the terrible details of the life and death of a poor unfortunate without one heart-throb, but if a dozen or a score of us string ourselves on a thread of sympathy, our hearts melt like wax. Another question arises: Can the Pennsylvania Railroad Company long continue to run excursion trains at such a disastrous loss? Think of it! Twenty-two hundred and fifty cars were despatched. A CHRISTMAS HYMN.

'Tis a' wae still—or Bethlehem a peace,
As it the great Nicht hold its breath,
While Life in quietness its sodgo
Ower a wee bit o' Death.

The pagan is in unconquered hand
Let fall his hammer ane o' gelt:
He feels the presence of his Lord
Before He mak's ane mell.

The Deceptive crumbled to their base,
The blade is shiver'd as a pun,
Yet sorrowed in its power of ban
Kneel to its maker's son.

All Nature for a third divine
When Satyr like an ocean on the night,
Where paleness to the heaven's shrine,
Proclaimed for new born light—

Light to the shepherds! and the city
Whilst from its dome radiates bold
Light to the White Man from afar,
Bearing their gifts of gold!

Let it be a relief to Sin and Grief—
Light to a world in all its ways!
The Light of Love—come to bring
Rising over Lyrian years.

Light on a cradled bed of straw,
Sprightly beams on a manger—
A light to guide to Christ returns
Ly gory to His own.

Those sinful ways will be abated
The Christmas chanting's now as him
Below glory ascended.

Peace and rest to all men!

Johnny Reeves.

GIVE a boy's heart bird, and then you are sure of him. This is the way a teacher in a city Mission School won Johnny Reeves, "the little outcast." She had collected a lot of wild school boys into a class and was trying to teach them, when, one day, she noticed that one of them had fallen asleep and began to snore.

"He's drunk," said his ragged little companions, laughing.

Of course the woman set to work to bring him to consciousness, and by three days afterward she saw and understood him.

Yes, I was drunk, that's a fact," said Johnny, as frank as possible. "I didn't mean to get so low, mum; I kind o' love rye, but I couldn't help it."

"Well, Johnny, you shouldn't say so. You could help it."

"No, mum! I've got to steal to get a drink, I am sorry. What was it they ever made rye to begin it for?"

"I heard it when I listened outside Johnny Reeves' door, in the dark street. He keeps a liquor store, and he gave me the run and again in the bottom of the account of my life.

"Johnny, it would be useless to leave you in a drunkard. I can't—I won't—do it. Will you try to give up drinking if I'll tell you how I can help you?"

Johnny thought a minute. "I don't believe I could. I've got so used to it, you see. If I go without it, I feel so queer and sick-like. But I'll try, mum, if you'll tell me how."

"Then I'll pray to God to help you," said the woman, and she did.

The poor boy struggled hard. He was not a bad boy, only a drunkard. He had no home, no friends, no one to love him. He was a waif, a child of the streets, and he had learned to drink as he had learned to swear. But he struggled hard, and he conquered. He kept away from the liquor store, and he came to the woman's room every day to tell her of his victory.

"I'm going to be a man, mum," he said, "and I'll work for you. I'll do anything you tell me to do, and I'll never touch another drop of liquor."

Johnny kept his word. He got work, and he worked for the woman who had saved him. He was a faithful, loving boy, and he grew to be a noble man.

Years passed away, and Johnny Reeves was a rich merchant in a large city. He had a wife and children, and a beautiful home. He was a Christian man, and a member of a church. He was a prosperous, happy man.

One day a poor, miserable woman came to his door and asked for charity. She was a drunkard, and her husband was in prison. She had children who were starving. She was sick and cold and hungry.

Johnny Reeves looked at her. He saw that she was a drunkard, and he turned away from her with disgust.

"I have no charity for drunkards," he said. "Let them starve."

But the woman begged and prayed, and at last Johnny Reeves looked at her face. It was the face of the woman who had saved him from himself, and he took her home to his own house, and cared for her as long as she lived.

Then he went to the prison and found her husband, and he got him out, and gave him work, and he saved him from himself, and he became a good man.

Johnny Reeves is a rich man now, and he is a good man, and he has a beautiful home, and a lovely wife and children, and he is happy. He owes it all to the woman who gave him a place in her heart, and who saved him from himself.

A Victim to Opium.

A CURIOUS city occurs in its lessons many a sad and peculiar case of suffering. Some are more striking than others, but men come and go, and we are none the wiser. The mere sine-movement of a death has continue more regards than the world has time to admit.

One of the saddest cases—and only sad, but unusually tragic—is that of Mrs. Isaac C. Perkins, three married, three deceased, and finally a pauper and a suicide. Mrs. Perkins was the corpse, and all owing to a love for the fatal drug—opium. Her history is an eventful one, with many romance and thrilling incidents, but only the saddest can claim. To add to the strange fascination which hangs over her career and its finale, she was a woman of rare mind, highly cultivated and well-to-do people. We can read the terrible details of the life and death of a poor unfortunate without one heart-throb, but if a dozen or a score of us string ourselves on a thread of sympathy, our hearts melt like wax. Another question arises: Can the Pennsylvania Railroad Company long continue to run excursion trains at such a disastrous loss? Think of it! Twenty-two hundred and fifty cars were despatched. During May the passengers are placed at 300,000, and during the month of June, the number reaches 1,000,000. The greatest day's receipts came in on the 24th of October, when as 200 cars were transported over the road, and $53,000 were received for tickets. The company had to employ over 5,000 attendants, and was compelled to borrow cars from all other lines, many of which have been lost or returned.

DR. DUNLAP, who has recently come before the public in connection with the Slade case, records in the British Medical Journal another case of arsenic poisoning from wall-paper. The symptoms of the patient were serious, but not satisfactory, pointing to no cause, and not a diagnosis, until the patient mentioned that her husband was similarly affected. Another question revealed the fact that a bedroom was lining with light green paper, and, a sample being afterward examined, it was found to be highly charged with arsenic. It will paper makers will not take the hint conveyed by these repeated notices, which must have met their eyes, some steps must be taken to make them. Perhaps the best way would be to blow down wall-papers altogether; they are unhealthy, especially with arsenic in them, and melancholy form a resting-place for contagia. Exchange.

M. MAREY-GRAPH, of Paris, has invented an ingenious apparatus for enabling one to determine instantly the sense of an air-gun or pistol-shot, by pointing in its direction with the indicator provided for this instrument. The apparatus consists essentially of a tripod stand supporting a circular table, which may be inclined at any angle to the horizon. On the table is engraved a map of the stars, and the circumference is divided into degrees and the divisions of the year. From its center there stands up a column which, revolving about its axis and supported on top a pointer, has pasted on it movable about its center in a plane perpendicular to the table, with in a horizontal direction it carries a second pointer, fixed in the direction of the former, and therefore in close contact with the map of the stars. It results from this that when the upper pointer is directed on any star, and the table has been properly oriented for the day and hour, the lower pointer will then cover the star in question, and its name may be read off on the map. The utmost freedom and convenience. A lantern-slide, for instance, illuminates the chart sufficiently, so that the whole stand may be carried out of doors and used there with advantage. "Where were you standing at the time this trouble occurred?" asked a practical joker of a prominent member of an athletic female, whose avoirdupois ran ringed somewhere in the vicinity of 200 pounds. "You can bet your life I was standing at my husband's back, where every woman ought to be when the old man is going to get into a row." No further questions were asked.—San Francisco Post.

An Ingenious Swindle.

THE London Sportsman of a recent date contains an account of what it terms "one of the most gigantic swindles ever perpetrated," which has just been brought to light. About the beginning of August last, it says a number of ladies and gentlemen presented in the chief cities on the continent, received a newspaper called The Sport, the contents and every single feature of which had all the appearance of being genuine. One article, devoted to the unsatisfactory position of the principal commission agents connected with the turf, the writer suffered by a Mr. Andrew Montgomery, noted above his colleagues for "soundness of judgment and infallible knowledge," were back on all English This gentleman, it appeared, had had extraordinary success on the turf, betting upward of half a million in eleven years. Through the poisoning of the book-makers, however, who acted in combination against him, he could not get the marked odds on any horse against which he backed his opinion, and consequently lost heavily. The journal and thoughtful, however, that he had at last made his arrangements that he would in future bet only on the certainties, and would therefore have no more losses. The paper was sent to the gullible persons addressed would be ready "to act as my intermediaries with the English bookmakers, whom I name Fairplay, and who will be glad to give you the best odds and to hand over to you, and by whom you will please send the funds I shall have the pleasure of handing you for that purpose, as soon as I receive your reply. I shall be very glad to all w you the usual commission, that is to say, five per cent. on the amount of my winnings. Moreover, I shall be pleased to give you permission to make use of the information you may receive from me that is to say, if you see the betting odds and limits in the sporting papers, kindly to be careful to send the same information as a guarantee of fairness where the interest belongs to a higher social grade. This is soon was the daughter of a Mr. Fairplay, the well-known editor of the advertising department of the New York Evening Post. She was a girl with a sweet disposition and clever head, and scarcely ever received for tickets. The company had to employ over 5,000 attendants, and was compelled to borrow cars from all other lines, many of which have been lost or returned.

Slugnbur Episode in an Elopement Case.

A BENEVOLENT lady of this city was recently summoned to the relief of a poor woman living, or rather dying, in a mean tenement on Belford street, near Grove. The woman was of swarthy complexion, and turned out to be a native Hindoo, who had been in this country nearly two years trying to raise sufficient money to return to her own land. From her early youth she had been attached to a French family, and her departure from India was encumbered. The daughter of her master, a beautiful girl of twenty, eloped with a French merchant, and the woman, Ayah Maratt by name, accompanied her. The French girl married her lover on shipboard, and the happy couple went below a pleasant honeymoon on the ship's crew. The husband tried to quell the outbreak, and received wounds from the effects of which he died. The wife became a raving maniac, and the Hindoo woman was to depart. The ship's cook, a Malay, took a fancy to her, and by his assistance she succeeded in getting ashore. At once she fell into the hands of Mr. Montgomery, who, they were taken to a well-known hall discussion in the city, who naturally refused to purchase them until full inquiries had been made. A telegram was sent to the lady, who immediately replied that the bodies of the escorting had full power to dispose of them. A check was drawn upon the Bank of England, the check was presented, and £10,000 in crisp notes were handed to the person who represented himself to be Mr. Montgomery. It is well known, however, that the possible as those of all the notes went out of the bank. Taking up train for Glasgow on the same night, one of the confederates presented himself at the Clydesdale Bank on the following morning. He was a prosperous merchant, and a ship was expected every moment at Greenock. Could he by 'fivers with a letter of credit on the bank to the extent of £5,000? It was important to the credit of the house, and the emergency of the case brooked no delay. The manager of the Clydesdale Bank, who was also deputy manager consented, and the letter of credit was given. After this all was easy. Greenock is but twenty miles down the Clyde, and in the course of an hour or more the letter of credit was cashed in £100 Scotch bank notes. The money had hardly left the Bank of England when further inquiries were made—this time of a more exhaustive character—and it was then discovered that the whole thing was a carefully-planned swindle, the plot of which must have occupied months in preparation, and have taxed the thieves to their utmost in carrying out the details. The police started in pursuit as soon as information was given them, but, though some subclues, they never came up to the thieves. There is every reason to think, however, that the confederates in daring scheme are still in the country, and an advertisement appears, offering a reward of £1,000 for their apprehension and the recovery of the money.

Ferns in the Parlor.

FERNS are plants the culture of which is very interesting, either in the greenhouse or parlor. Nothing adorns a sitting-room more than a case of ferns in luxuriant health, in the midst of winter, when vegetation is at rest outdoors and nothing meets the eye but bare trees and showings of snow. A case for this purpose may be made of any size and almost any shape. In their construction, however, several important points have to be borne in mind, for the benefit of the plants which are to grow in them; the first of which is a means of obtaining a thorough drainage. Some inches of broken pieces of pots, charcoal and gravel, placed in the bottom of the case, should be well, and, however potous the soil itself may be, without perfect drainage it cannot be long in a condition suitable for supplying a healthful food for plants. The water retained in the soil, having no means of escape, soon sours it. To secure good drainage, size drawers and fillings in that part of the room where the case stands, two bottom are necessary: one, the fine bottom, which should be thoroughly perforated, to allow the free escape of the water; below this one another should be placed, to receive the water as it passes from the soil, and therefore requires to be water-tight, and so fashioned that it can be emptied and cleansed without disturbing any other part of the case. On the upper bottom place a good thick layer of pebbles or broken pots for drainage. Upon this put a small mound of suitable soil for ferns—peat, loam, and a good mixture of sand. Select the plants from those which grow wild in the woods, so as to imitate a small rock-work, allowing sufficient cavities for planting lumps and mosses.

Proper means of ventilation is also necessary, which is best secured by having part of the roof movable. When so constructed that the movable part can slide over the fixed part, it gives the least trouble, and is the most convenient when cleaning, watering, or planting the ferns. Top ventilation is better than that at the sides, as plants thus when side ventilation as adopted, as then there is no ill effects arising from cold draughts passing through them.

When planting the ferns, put some erect-growing kinds at the top, and the more dwarf and fairly ones on the sides of the mound, using mosses for cover. The whole process is one of simplicity, either in the preparation of the materials or in the planting. Those of the easiest kinds, which succeed in these cases, look best mixed through the fronds. Upon removing the plants from the pots, do not break up the balls any before planting. The roots will soon make a start into the fresh soil, which should be pressed rather firmly around the roots. After the plants are in, give a good watering and shut close for a few days. In selecting plants for such purposes, dwarf-grown plants, in small pots, are the best.—Mr. Hilton, in Ohio Farmer.

—Squash is far dryer and better steamed than boiled.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

THE Poultry World says: Cooked corn-meal and potatoes served at regular time for three or four weeks before slaughtering time, is the best food for fattening fowls.

MANY make a mistake in watering plants too frequently, and a little at a time, just keeping the surface of the soil moist, while the bottom remains dry. The better way is to give the soil a good, thorough soaking, and then give no more water until the soil shows considerable dryness and some of the larger leaves exhibit signs of wilting. Of course there are plants —for instance, the common calla lily —which thrives best in soil that is constantly soaked with water; but there are comparatively few window plants that require such an amount of moisture to keep them growing or healthy.—Gardener's Magazine.

BY lovers of cabbage who have tasted both sorts the purple heads are judged to be the best for pickling. Pull off the loose leaves, quarter the cabbage, split them in a thread and sprinkle a great deal of salt on each one. Then let them remain five or six days. To a gallon of vinegar put an ounce each of pepper, ginger, mace and cinnamon. Cloves and allspice will improve the taste of the cabbages, but then will turn it a dark color. Heat the vinegar scalding hot, put in a little alum and turn the liquid while hot over the cabbage, the salt having first been drained off. Cauliflowers are very nice pickled in the same manner.—N. Y. Herald.

BEEF Soup, German Mode.—Rub the goose over night with salt, pepper, sage, thyme and sweet marjoram, inside and out; in the morning prepare the dressing as follows: A large handful of stoned raisins and Zante currants to bread crumbs, a couple of sour apples chopped fine, and one mealy potato, with butter mixed in, and all well rolled together; but put no spice in the dressing. Put the goose, and the giblets in a little water and roast the liver in a spoonful of flower, chop the gizzard, stir these in the liquid they were boiled in, add to the gravy in the dripping-pan, sprinkle in a little thyme, sage and sweet majoram, and it is done. Serve the gravy separately. When the goose is nearly done, parboil, peel, and slice a few slices of green parsley.

SAGO CREAM SOUP.—An old fowl that is only fit for the stock-pot makes delightful stock for this soup, and it may either be boiled till every particle of goodness is extracted, or if a less strong stock is wanted, it may only be boiled till tender, and the meat afterward used up in some of the made dishes where a white meat is required. Add to the stock while boiling, some whole white pepper and a blade of mace. Strain and skim the stock; this last operation is best done with what is called a kitchen paper, a most useful article, and of which a supply should be at the command of every cook. Lay the paper on the top of the stock and draw it out; the fat on the surface will adhere to it, and the process should be repeated till the paper comes off free from grease. For every two quarts of stock take three ounces of sago or of tapioca. Wash it in hot water, and boil it in the stock for one hour. Break the yolks of two eggs in a basin, and add to them half a pint of cream or milk; pour into it gradually a little of the hot soup, then turn it all into the remainder of the soup and heat it up, taking care it does not boil. The stock for this soup, may be made of veal, or of veal and beef, or of any of all three.—Rural New Yorker.

Reputation in Farming.

SUCCESS in this could depends very much upon reputation. In spite of all that is said, there is a great deal in a name, and a good name pays. When we want to buy an article we insist on one that has a reputation for being good. But it is not made by a manufacturer who has established a character for making good articles—and when we find it, pay more for it than we would for a similar article which, for aught we know, may be just as good, but which was made by somebody we never heard of. The same rule that is observed in other matters should be observed in farming. Be willing to pay for the assurance or warrants, which the trade mark of a reputable maker gives us, rather than lose time and vexation in the use of poor implements.—Rural New Yorker.

DRY GOODS,

Grand Traverse Herald, Dec. 28.

Thomas Conant, Esq., A. Leroy, and Chief Justice Post, left on Wednesday morning of last week for Detroit, to attend a meeting of the Michigan Pioneer Society.

A meeting of the Michigan Congressional delegation was held in Detroit, last week for the purpose of securing funds for the improvement of Grand Traverse Harbor.

The Detroit, Lansing & Lake Michigan railroad, running from Ionia to Grand Rapids, was sold last week, by the Receivers, for $350,000. We don't know what it cost, or will cost, to get it into Charlevoix on the narrow gauge.

We don't know whether to rejoice or to grieve at the loss of the Traverse City Herald from the ranks of the newspaper fraternity. We rejoice for the success of the publishers in securing a paying subscription list, and we grieve for the loss of a valuable exchange. Be a man or a newspaper, neighbor.

A Happy New Year.

We extend to all our friends and patrons a happy New Year.

THE NEWS.

AT HOME.

The defendants in the manslaughter case against the Florida Board of Canvassers made answer, on the 18th, which, after argument, the Supreme Court declared to be insufficient. The Board were given ten days to amend it.

WM. ORTON, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, telegraphed to Mr. Morrison, Chairman of the House Louisiana Investigating Committee, at New Orleans on the 15th, declining to furnish certain messages in possession of the company sent and received over the wires by officials of the Federal and Louisiana State Governments. Mr. Orton says he had waited a few days before answering the subpœna in the expectation that similar application would be made by the Senate Investigating Committee, so that the action of the company, being the same in respect to the messages of both political parties, could not be attributed to a desire to prejudice or promote the interests of either. Mr. Morrison sent another telegraphed Speaker Randall concerning this refusal on the part of Mr. Orton.

THE compensation that the messengers will be entitled to, who carry the Electoral votes of the several States to Washington, is $8,387, of which sum the Oregon messenger receives over $200.

ON the 19th, the Sioux Commission concluded its labors, and made report to Secretary Chandler. Accompanying the report was the treaty entered into by the Commissioners and representatives of the various Indian tribes. By its terms the Sioux surrender all claims to any country lying outside the boundaries of their permanent reserve, as defined by the treaty of 1868, and so much of said reserve as lies west of the 103d meridian of longitude, and as is included between the North and South Forks of the Cheyenne River east of said meridian. The Government secures full possession of the tract of country which includes the Black Hills and is refined by natural boundaries.

GEN SCHENCK received a letter, on the 19th, from Gen. Miles, in which he expresses the opinion that the Sioux war is substantially closed, and that, if the Indians are properly treated and the treaty obligations on the part of the Government are faithfully observed, there will never be another Indian war. In this opinion Gen. Sherman is reported to concur.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., was visited by a $160,000 fire on the night of the 19th. A fire the week before destroyed property in that city valued at $140,000.

CHANCELLOR H. W. GREEE, the distinguished New Jersey jurist, died at Trenton on the 20th. He was seventy-two years old.

ON the 20th, while six miles off the Highlands, near New York, the steam tug Jacob G. Brade exploded her boilers, instantly killing the captain and two of his men. The engineer and fireman were blown into the air, but their lives were saved.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

On the 15th, W. D. Simpson, the Democratic Lieutenant-Governor of South Carolina, sent a letter to the Senate, claiming his election and demanding his seat as presiding officer of that body. The letter was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The Democrats of the House and the Democrats of the Senate met in joint convention and balloted for Senator, without reaching an election. The Republican House, on the 16th, adopted—concurred—a resolution declaring the election of the present Circuit Judges void. At a meeting of the Democratic Legislature in joint session, on the 18th, the vote for Governor, including the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, which the Board of Canvassers threw out, was declared as follows: Hampton (Dem.) 92,261; Chamberlain (Rep.) 91,689.

The following correspondence passed between Messrs. Hampton and Chamberlain on the 20th:

ROOMS EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, }
COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 20.

TO WADE HAMPTON, Esq.—Dear Sir: Yesterday I demanding the seal of State, office, appurtenances, etc., is received. Being the legally elected and duly qualified Governor of the State, I see no reason why your demand should be complied with.

D. H. CHAMBERLAIN,
Governor of South Carolina.

An Associated Press dispatch of the 18th says the State officers and heads of departments had been unable, owing to the political disturbance, to make up their reports to enable Gov. Chamberlain to prepare his annual message, but had been furnished to the Senate and the Republican House to take a recess, on the 22d, until February. During the recess, it was said, Hampton would issue writs for new elections to fill vacancies, so as to provide himself with a Senate. Everything was quiet in Columbia.

In the South Carolina Democratic House, on the 19th, seventy-nine Senators and Representatives being present, a ballot was taken for United States Senator, which resulted in the choice of M. C. Butler, he receiving sixty-four out of the seventy-nine votes cast. In the Supreme Court, United States Attorney Corbin filed a return to the rule for contempt. The Court also heard the argument in the case of the Tilden ex. rel. the Hayes Electors, but adjourned without taking any action.

The South Carolina Senate, by a strict party vote, decided, on the 20th, to adjourn with the Republican House sine die on the 22d. The Tax and Appropriation bill passed to a second reading. The tax levy aggregates seventeen mills, exclusive of local taxes, and calls for $2,910,000. In the Democratic House, a resolution was adopted requesting Gov. Hampton to issue his proclamation calling upon all faithful, law-abiding citizens to pay to the Governor, or some person appointed by him to receive it, a sum equal to one-fourth of the State and county tax, to the end that the necessary expenses of the Government may be paid.

ABROAD.

ALEXANDRIA (Egypt) telegrams, received in London on the 17th, state that the Khedive had announced to his American officers that he was dissatisfied, and should decline to renew his contracts with them.

LONDON dispatches of the 18th say a coasting collision had occurred on that day at the South Wales Company's pit, near Newport. Seventeen dead bodies had already been recovered, and many of the same in respect to the messages of both political parties, could not be attributed to a desire to prejudice or promote the interests of either. Mr. Morrison sent another telegraphed Speaker Randall concerning this refusal on the part of Mr. Orton.

A ROME (Italy) telegram of the 19th announces the appointment of Rev. John Spaulding, of Louisville, Ky., as Bishop of the Diocese of Peoria, Ill.

W. B. C. BARBER, an accountant of the Bank of Montreal, in Toronto, Canada, was arrested on the 19th, upon the charge of embezzling $100,000.

CHARLES BRENT, the Louisville (Ky.) forger, was surrendered to the United State Minister by the British authorities on the 20th, and left on the evening of that day for the United States.

A VIENNA dispatch of the 20th says Russia had granted Servia 2,000,000 rubles for the reorganization of her army.

CONGRESSIONAL.

On the 19th, the Senate was not in session. The Postoffice Appropriation bill was passed in the House, with amendments. The Speaker presented a telegram received this day from Dr. Bartlett, Secretary of the Louisiana Select Investigating Committee, and one to Mr. Morrison from Mr. Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, refusing to produce the original telegraphic dispatches. The telegrams were read, and a resolution was adopted, without discussion or division, referring Mr. Morrison's communication to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Judiciary Committee made a report that the action of the House at the last session, to compel the production of telegrams for the purpose of conducting an investigation, Mr. Hurd making a minority report requiring a description of such telegrams to be given. After a lengthy discussion, Mr. Hurd's resolution requiring the subpœna to describe the specific telegrams to be produced was defeated—for by 129—and a substitute was adopted declaring that telegraphic communications have no more privilege than oral or other communications, and must be produced when called for. The Senate amendment to the House bill for the sale of certain lands in Kansas was concurred in. The Conference Committee's report on the bill to provide for the expenses of the investigating committees was agreed to.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

[Compiled from Associated Press Reports, unless otherwise designated.]

LOUISIANA.

M. S. Peeler, of New Orleans, was before the House Committee, on the 18th, and testified that he was United States Supervisor in Poll 2 of the Second Ward; that no attempt was made by the Republican Commissioner to prevent Democrats from voting; that Mr. Barr, Republican Commissioner, had told him, after the election, that there was some trouble about that poll, that the Democratic Commissioner would be arrested, and they would take the box and fix it to suit themselves, witness was offered $500 by Mr. Casey, a Republican Marshal; he would tell him and another Marshal how the box he declined the offer and notified the Democratic Committee, who sent a force for protection; the Republicans subsequently made an attempt to seize the box and take it to the Custom-House; witness was subsequently assaulted by Barr, Republican Commissioner, because he would not certify the returns as correct, and refused to allow the box to be taken by the Republicans to the Custom-House; witness said the election was peaceable, quiet and fair, and bore him self as he did not keep the money which he was offered for going back on his party, was still a Republican. Pompey Steele, Marshal Thirteen, E. H. Flowers and Henry Smith tell substantially that they were voted the Democratic ticket at the last election, and had been assaulted and mistreated for so doing. The voters said he canvassed the State for the Democrats, and had heard a large number of colored men say they would vote the Democratic ticket, and others said they were afraid to vote such ticket owing to threats which had been made against them; Senator Pinchback, S. J. Smith, lawyer, of New Orleans, testified that he canvassed the State for the Democrats; saw no intimidation of colored people except by organizations of the Republican party in office and Confederates; considered people would be again enslaved; saw a number of negroes who promised to vote the Democratic ticket; heard of no disturbance in the Parish of East Feliciana; Supervisor Anderson had told witness that Parish would go Democratic, but would be counted Republican; that he (Anderson) had said the Conservatives would like to swear that Democratic officials wanted him to swear false; that fraud, violence and intimidation were practiced by the Democrats, but that he refused to do so.

At the meeting of the Senate Committee, on the 18th, Gov. Wells, President of the Returning Board, was called up to give some information respecting the action of the Board; he said he would furnish the Committee with the original statement of the votes polled and votes excluded, but as the Board was busy preparing a report to the Legislature, the clerks would not have time to make the copies; the Chairman said the statements of the committee would do the work. Witness had been summoned to testify in the case of East Baton Rouge, and a large number of papers were already on hand to testify. No witnesses had been summoned in the Bossier case, but could be if desired. Witness had been examined by the House Committee.

Several colored citizens were examined by the House Committee on the 18th, and gave testimony similar in substance to that of witnesses on the two preceding days. George Johnson (colored) was recalled, and stated that he had been assaulted by colored Republicans since he testified before the committee; he knew other witnesses who feared violence if they testified. E. W. Barnes, Western Agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, who had been subpœnaed by the Democratic Committee and received by Messrs. Kellogg, Packard, Dibble, Warmoth, Carter and Ozen, a letter from and after the 15th of August, 1876, was called before the committee and stated that he had been instructed by General Superintendent Orton to refuse to deliver or produce the messages, and consequently he was making no instructions, refuse to deliver the telegrams called for by the subpœna. A resolution was then adopted, by a party vote, the Republican members of the committee voting, directing to the clause "his refusal being in contempt" the House, being, they thought, the best judge of that question) to communicate to the House, for its consideration, Mr. Barnes' refusal to produce the telegrams, "his refusal being in contempt of the House of Representatives."

The Senate Committee was called to order at 12:30, on the 19th, by Senator Howe, Chairman, who stated that the Committee was not yet provided with the desired tables of returns. The testimony of Eaton Loz wood, who was said to be in a dying condition, was taken before a sub-committee at his residence. A special to the Times-Democrat gives a summary of his evidence, in substance as follows: He stated that he was a leading Republican on the island; that, in his ward, there were nearly two hundred Republicans to seventy-five white Democrats; that in the latter part of August last the leading Republican of the parish, Dr. J. Hudgeons, a man of standing voted there; swore that they did not vote and were not at the precinct during the day.

Both committees were in session on the 19th, the former examining witnesses in the Custom-House. The House Committee had fourteen colored witnesses before it. Their names appeared on the poll-list of Precinct 19, in Leon County, and there were votes in it for Democratic Parish officers who claim to be in balance the names on the list. Each of them stated that he did not vote at Precinct 13. The case of Senator County was also investigated. There were no clerks in the county during the election, and the Democratic ticket, and others said they were afraid to vote such ticket owing to threats which had been made against them. Witnesses S. J. Smith, lawyer, of New Orleans, testified that he canvassed the State for the Democrats; saw no intimidation of colored people except by organizations of the party in office and Confederates; considered people would be again enslaved; saw a number of negroes who promised to vote the Democratic ticket; heard of no disturbance in the Parish of East Feliciana; Supervisor Anderson had told witness that Parish would go Democratic, but would be counted Republican; that he (Anderson) had said the Conservatives would like to swear false; that fraud, violence and intimidation were practiced by the Democrats, but that he refused to do so.

Each of them stated that he did not vote at Precinct 13. The case of Senator County was also investigated. There were no clerks in the county during the election, and voted the Democratic ticket, and others said they were afraid to vote such ticket owing to threats and hands, with double-barrelled guns revealed at him; that he saw under the coat-tails of one of them a pistol, and that the white arms around his eyes; that one said "Hello, Eaton, old fellow, we've got you now;" that he ran for the corner of the house, but received five buckshot in his side and arm, and fell, but sprang up again and got around the corner before the second shot was fired; that after he fell he received another shot, which was aimed at Primus Johnson, and which killed him; that the child in his arms; that soldiers were afterward sent to the house to guard him, and he was removed to Monroe, and subsequently to New Orleans; he was obliged to leave everything behind, and dare not return again; the Republican and Returning Board counsels submitted statements of their cases to the committee.

Ex-Gov. R. C. Wickliffe was recalled and examined before the House Committee, on the 19th. He stated that the change in the vote of West Feliciana Parish was due to the interest taken by the whites and the Democratic party in the State in having fair and economical administration, and a proper application of the school fund to the benefit of a Democratic success; knew of no threats of violence, or anything of the kind practiced by any one; found the negroes readily influenced by argument, by example and by no other means to influence them to vote the Democratic ticket; William Maynard and Arledge F. D'Lass (both colored), of Orleans, testified—the latter to having been threatened by colored Republicans, because he was a Democrat, and that, since election, he had been knocked down and threatened with death, for having voted the Democratic ticket; had the ballot to the effect that he knowed no violence, but heard of intimidation of colored voters in Lafourche; all Democratic speakers had consented peace, order and fairness. In election, and everything was peaceable and quiet. Jerry Hall, of Orleans, had canvassed the Parishes of Rapides, Grant and Ouachita for the Democrats; saw many colored people who said they would vote the Democratic ticket; knew of no violence, but heard of talk about killing Democratic negroes, etc.; a colored preacher said that no Democratic colored man should be recognized by his brethren. Gen. Thomas C. Anderson, of the Returning Board, submitted reasons for not bringing the documents called for by the subpœna, but the committee declined to receive his statement. In replying to the question whether the Tilden or Hayes Electors received a majority of the votes cast, Gen. Anderson stated that he did not know, he never added up the votes of the parishes until they were ready for promulgation; never heard any member of the Board say who had a majority of the votes cast; determined by counting out; would not examine into such matters; all final decisions in contested cases were made in executive session. He stated emphatically that there were no votes thrown out in the Parish of Orleans, that if the statement filed by the Board with the Secretary of State of the votes for Electors counted that any vote had been thrown out, then such statement was not correct. Gen. Anderson repeated this statement in regard to two other polls.

The statement of votes rejected in each Parish, and at what polls rejected, was received by the Senate Committee, from the Returning Board, on the 20th. Five witnesses were examined, their names being Jessup, Republican; Dupuy, Republican; Estes Longwood), Rev. James, Cora Williams and Andrew Jackson (all colored), who were sworn in intimidation and outrages of various kinds, in Bienville Parish, by which Democratic voters were prevented from voting. Jessup testified that he voted the Democratic ticket at the last election, and had been assaulted and mistreated for so doing. Witnesses said he canvassed the State for the Democrats, and had heard a large number of colored men say they would vote the Democratic ticket, and others said they were afraid to vote such ticket owing to threats which had been made against them. Senators S. J. Smith, lawyer, of New Orleans, testified that he canvassed the State for the Democrats; saw no intimidation of colored people except by organizations of the party in office and Confederates; considered people would be again enslaved; saw a number of negroes who promised to vote the Democratic ticket; heard of no disturbance in the Parish of East Feliciana; Supervisor Anderson had told witness that Parish would go Democratic, but would be counted Republican; that he (Anderson) had said the Conservatives would like to swear false; that fraud, violence and intimidation were practiced by the Democrats, but that he refused to do so.

The Senate Committee was called to order at 12:30, on the 19th, by Senator Howe, Chairman, who stated that the committee was not yet provided with the desired tables of returns. The testimony of Eaton Lozwood, who was said to be in a dying condition, was taken before a sub-committee at his residence. A special to the Times-Democrat gives a summary of his evidence, in substance as follows: He stated that he was a leading Republican on the island; that, in his ward, there were nearly two hundred Republicans to seventy-five white Democrats; that in the latter part of August last the leading Republican of the parish, Dr. J. Hudgeons, a man of standing voted there; swore that they did not vote and were not at the precinct during the day.

Both committees were in session on the 19th, the former examining witnesses in the Custom-House. The House Committee had fourteen colored witnesses before it. Their names appeared on the poll-list of Precinct 19, in Leon County, and there were votes in it for Democratic Parish officers who claim to be in balance the names on the list. Each of them stated that he did not vote at Precinct 13. The case of Senator County was also investigated. There were no clerks in the county during the election, and voted the Democratic ticket, and others said they were afraid to vote such ticket owing to threats which had been made against them. Witnesses S. J. Smith, lawyer, of New Orleans, testified that he canvassed the State for the Democrats; saw no intimidation of colored people except by organizations of the party in office and Confederates; considered people would be again enslaved; saw a number of negroes who promised to vote the Democratic ticket; heard of no disturbance in the Parish of East Feliciana; Supervisor Anderson had told witness that Parish would go Democratic, but would be counted Republican; that he (Anderson) had said the Conservatives would like to swear false; that fraud, violence and intimidation were practiced by the Democrats, but that he refused to do so.

At the meeting of the Senate Committee, on the 19th, Gov. Wells, President of the Returning Board, was called up to give some information respecting the action of the Board; he said he would furnish the Committee with the original statement of the votes polled and votes excluded, but as the Board was busy preparing a report to the Legislature, the clerks would not have time to make the copies; the Chairman said the original statements of the committee would do the work. Witness had been summoned to testify in the case of East Baton Rouge, and a large number of papers were already on hand to testify. No witnesses had been summoned in the Bossier case, but could be if desired. Witness had been examined by the House Committee.

Several colored citizens were examined by the House Committee on the 19th, and gave testimony similar in substance to that of witnesses on the two preceding days. George Johnson (colored) was recalled, and stated that he had been assaulted by colored Republicans since he testified before the committee; he knew other witnesses who feared violence if they testified. E. W. Barnes, Western Agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, who had been subpœnaed by the Democratic Committee and received by Messrs. Kellogg, Packard, Dibble, Warmoth, Carter and Ozen, a letter from and after the 15th of August, 1876, was called before the committee and stated that he had been instructed by General Superintendent Orton to refuse to deliver or produce the messages, and consequently he was making no instructions, refuse to deliver the telegrams called for by the subpœna. A resolution was then adopted, by a party vote, the Republican members of the committee voting, directing to the clause "his refusal being in contempt" the House, being, they thought, the best judge of that question) to communicate to the House, for its consideration, Mr. Barnes' refusal to produce the telegrams, "his refusal being in contempt of the House of Representatives."

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Yule-log and Mistletoe—Carnival Thoughts and Scenes—Large Art Sale—Brooklyn Art—Free Pencil Sermons—A Fair Answer—Queen Emma and Her Visit to Indiana.

[Event no new Departure.]

To the Sentinel:

New York, Dec. 27, 1875.

And now as the season of the year is upon us, and the time when the Yule-log and Mistletoe is about to be lighted and hung, as custom and old-fashioned folks do advise and direct, the duty devolves upon me, as the writer of passing events, to take cognizance of the same, and give to your readers a brief account of the doings and happenings of the week, and of the day about and around us in our City.

The season of preparation for the great festival is in full swing in New York as it is in every other city, town and village in the land, and the bustle and excitement of the week when the stores are open and the streets are filled with people, is almost beyond description. From the poorest to the richest, all seem to be busy, and hardly an exception to the rule seems to obtain. Even the beggars, tramps and vagabonds, who usually infest the streets, and make themselves generally obnoxious to passers-by, seem to be busier than usual, and to have more to do, and to be in a hurry to get it done. Even the policemen, who are usually so dignified and unapproachable, seem to unbend a little, and to be more affable and communicative than usual. The whole city seems to be in a state of excitement, and the air is full of the spirit of Christmas.

The streets are filled with people, going to and fro, and in every direction, while the sidewalks are literally packed with those who are looking at the display of goods in the windows of the stores. Every one seems to be carrying a bundle of some kind, and the number of packages that are being carried home by the people is almost beyond belief. Every one seems to be buying something, and the amount of money that is being spent in the purchase of Christmas presents is almost beyond belief. The stores are all crowded with customers, and the clerks are kept busy from morning until night waiting upon them. The sidewalks are also crowded with people, and it is almost impossible to walk any distance without being jostled by the crowd. The streets are also filled with vehicles of all kinds, and the noise of the traffic is almost deafening. The whole city seems to be in a state of excitement, and the air is full of the spirit of Christmas.

The display of goods in the windows of the stores is also very fine. There is an endless assortment of toys and novelties. The holiday goods, such as books and games, are also very fine. Shoshone Falls.

We left the Park by another trail that led us among deep, gloomy canyons formed by the rivers in the mists past, long ere it had contracted to its present limits. These were frequented by thousands of chiffon-clad ladies and some ignoramuses that chattered and screamed incessantly; and from an occasional bunch of straggling shrubbery came the pleasant notes of the song-sparrow. These broke the monotonous silence of the forbidding precipices, and gave life to the otherwise dreary scene. Having reached the upper plateau once more, we gallopped two miles farther, and halted to listen to the rough, hoarse, and muffled roar of the Shoshone Falls that were thundering far beneath us in the canyon a mile beyond, we had a fine view of their outlines. Looking down from our elevated terrace, we could see around them all the elements of a beautiful landscape; gorse and meadow, plain and dell, an undulating park, dells in robes of many-hued flowers, a placid river, and a lofty snowy cascade and, in the background, towering terraces of barren crags, ventable mountains of stone. Unmounting, we led our horses down into the dell, and we reached a small park skirting the river. This was covered with grass that reached to our knees, and sprinkled over it were many species of gaudy flowers new to me.

We followed the bank of the river until we reached a coppice of juniper that thrives wherever the refreshing spray falls, and, passing through this, found ourselves standing on lookout Point, directly over the river where it plunges downward and from thence, we had a magnificent view of the falls as we could gaze directly down upon them, they being only four feet below us. Glancing up the stream, we could see that its channel was for half a mile or so one mass of screaming rapids and small cataracts, which were numerously dotted with barren rocks and flower-clad islets of many forms. Its entering the large basin, we made out eight good falls within an area of two hundred yards, which averaged from six to twenty feet in height, and as they were alike in outline, close to the shore the water formed deep lanes or canals of bubbling cascades through the rocks, and their gentle ripple contrasted with the tumultuous confusion adjoining them. As these varied and diverging bodies approached the precipice they swung together to produce the Grand Falls, which are excelled only by Niagara and the Pahoo on the Missouri in volume, while they outrival all in diversity of form and contrast of surroundings. Massive in power and vigorous in action, warm in color, yet en cameo in gloom, impressive by immediate accessories, yet encompassed by savage grandeur—they possess all the elements that make cent scenes attractive to the lover of the beautiful. Their very situation in the midst of a desolate attenuation plain, and hemmed in by canyons whose direct depths are unpenetrable to the sunlight for many months in the year, adds to their interest and enhances their impressive magnificence. The main falls are estimated by those who have taken the trouble to be 220 feet in height; but this is probably beyond the bounds, though, judging from appearance, not much. They have a width of two yards by following the curve of their outline, but in straight line they will not much exceed 200. They are of an irregular concave shape, somewhat like a reversed crescent, but during the spring freshets they assume a convex form, owing to the increased volume and velocity of the water. The pretty park, with its luxuriant grasses, flowers and copses of junipers, gives a softness and color to the falls that are agreeably appreciated by the eye, as they impart the picturesque element so much needed, but on the opposite side the dark and towering terraces of trap, with the ineffable accompaniment of a heavy pallor, loom up against the sky in black masses, and convey the most impressive idea of gloom and rugged sublimity. While the falls are grand from every point of view, it is only at their base that one can fully appreciate them, and I found the attempt to reach that position a most hazardous one, as I had to descend the sheer face of the bowlders, and to several instances I could only find a light hold for my finger tips and the toes of one foot. Had a bit of the rocks given way, I must have been dashed to pieces on the crags below. It was only by bracing every nerve, and firmly clinching the teeth that I was enabled to make the descent; but I confess that even then a knee occasionally trembled, despite my utmost effort to be brave. After a toilsome struggle I reached a prostrate tree that lay against the bluff at a convenient angle, and this led me into a ravine which was covered with stunted junipers, briers and a large, wiry grass. This even was so steep that it was only by leaning well back and failing against tress that I was prevented from being shot downward into the river by my own momentum. By ofumbering over lowbless, vaulting fallen trees and making bridges of prostrate, water-polished trunks, I was enabled to get within forty feet of the falls; but further progress was checked by the smooth and perpendicular crags.

Selecting a mossy bank covered with a long, dank, and prostrate grass, I threw myself upon it, and for two hours gazed upon the stirring vista before me in a sort of half-dreamy mood, for it was too overpowering to allow the faculties to expand into full action. The longer I looked the more I desired to, for I was fairly captivated by the grand yet weird beauty that surrounded me. The water, in overleaping, sweeping waves of white, and with a vibrating sound that resembled that produced by many mills in motion, thundered stealthily shown ward, and developed splendid rainbows that extended far above the falls and spanned the stream; while heavy showers of vapory spray slowly upward rose to a height of two feet, then lazily floated away in clouds of darkish gray.—Appleton's Journal for January.

Christmas in Norway.

The great festival of the year in Norway, as among all Germanic nations, is Christmas. It is observed with all the sanctity to its association with the birth of the Savior is, however, an open question it, for many customs still keep alive in the remoter valleys some of the old heathen rites. The Christmas log, the largest that can be hauled a small park skirting the river. This was covered with grass that reached to our knees, and sprinkled over it were many species of gaudy flowers new to me.

We followed the bank of the river until we reached a coppice of juniper that thrives wherever the refreshing spray falls, and, passing through this, found ourselves standing on lookout Point, directly over the river where it plunges downward; and from thence, we had a magnificent view of the falls as we could gaze directly down upon them, they being only four feet below us. Deacon Ophiltree's Pew.

In there is anything Mr. Ophiltree is particular about it his own individual comes in his own particular pew. For he can't half enjoy the sermon if he has to sit anywhere else than in the inside corner of number fifty-two, right hand side of the middle aisle. For seats he has occupied this seat, as regularly as Sunday morning came around. He has heard the gospel "dispensed with" by one minister after another. From that seat he has watched and nodded encouragement to the Boanerges who have preached the Gospel after the ideas of Deacon Ophiltree, and has frowned forbidding-ly and terribly at the hapless preboy dary who has dared to enunciate doctrines which were disagreeable to number fifty-two. No usher or sexton ever so far forgot himself as to put anyone in that corner because the deacon was a little late. It was always considered sacred. Imagine, then, the deacon's amazement last Sunday morning when he entered the church, wrapped in a profound study of the doctrine of regeneration through sanctification, to find a solemn, important-looking stranger in his precious corner. The deacon brought up all of a sudden at the head of his pew and gazed at the intruder in open-mouthed, but voiceless wonder. The stranger, never retuning his gaze, sat twirling his thumbs and looking straight at the pulpit. Deacon Ophiltree, doubting the evidence of his senses, backed out into the aisle, and took out his spectacles, rubbed them, and placed them on his nose. Then he tilted back his head and looked at the new number "52." Plain as ever a "52" was on the door, and there was no mistake in the words. There could be no mistake about that. Then he advanced to the head of the pew, and bent his head down until his chin touched his breast, and gazed fixedly at the stranger over his spectacles. There was no mistake about that. The stranger was there. Then the Deacon stepped back one space, leaving the entrance to the pew undisturbed, so that the stranger could get out without any trouble. But the stranger didn't appear to have any idea of evacuating his position. He grew a little restless under the Deacon's increased glances, but he only fidgetted a little in his seat, and stopped twirling his thumbs to pick up a hymn book, which he opened at "Hold the fort," and read that stirring bit of religious military composition with evident comfort and edification. The Deacon was amazed. "Possibly," he thought, "the intruder does not see me." Then he took out his handkerchief, a radish standard, which looked like a pocket edition of a garrison flag, and, burying his nose in this warlike banner, blew a toot that echoed through the room like a signal of defiance. The stranger never moved, but he bent his eyes upon the page before him and read the line:

Bear the standard down.

with unchanged emotion.

The Deacon was more astonished than he would have been if the end of the church had fallen on. He crammed his handkerchief into the crown of his hat with the defiant air of a man who means business, and refolded his lungs, and called for the stranger's attention with a stentorian

"A-hem!"

The stranger fidgetted a little, turned very red in the face and looked up, glanced around and saw the congregation filtering and taking it all in, and he evidently made up his mind to "hold the fort" until Gen. Ringer's troops ejected him, if he had to stay there all winter. So he settled himself again, and without looking at the Deacon, turned over to the hymn.

A charge to keep I have

The minister rose to give out the opening hymn, but the congregation had no eyes or ears for anything but this indignant human being who was a stranger. The Deacon was about to introduce some new tactics, when he felt a touch upon his arm, and a gentleman-looking church official said to him, "I will show you to a seat, sir, if you please."

"Seat?" said the Deacon, in such wrathful undertones that he was nearly choked. "Seat? That," pointing to the blushing, but obstinate stranger, "that corner is my seat. The seat I have occupied and paid for, for those nine years past."

"You are merely mistaken," said the placid official, "and you are interrupting the service and distracting the ministers. The seats in this church have been free for the past five years."

The Deacon looked around him as though he expected the ground to slide from beneath his feet and a gleam of intelligence and dismay passed over his face.

"This is—" he gasped, and could get no further.

"The Church of the Lost Sheep," explained the official.

The titters of the congregation followed the mortified Deacon to the door as he bent his steps toward his own Church of the Ransomed, and when he got there he struck everybody dumb with amazement by dropping into the seat nearest the door and if a cow or an ichtyosaurus had waltzed in and taken its seat in the inside corner of number fifty-two, Deacon Ophiltree wouldn't have been in the least surprised, and wouldn't have raised one single murmur of objection.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

One of the Tragedies of the Brooklyn Theater.

Last Tuesday night Mr. John Herbert, of Twelfth street, near Third avenue, was suddenly seized with a desire to go to the Brooklyn Theater to see the "Two Orphans." His wife did not feel like going that evening, and wanted to wait a day or two, especially as she had a little girl three years old whom she could not very well take with her, and she urged this as an objection. But her husband insisted on going, and proposed that the child be left with a lady who lived in the same house, and who had often expressed a willingness to do a favor of that kind. After much urging, Mrs. Herbert finally consented to this arrangement, but as they were going away the child ran after them, and, with tears in her eyes begged them not to leave her, the father replying playfully: "Oppa and mamma are going away off, and are not coming back to them little girl any more." Mrs. Herbert said it was a shame to plague the child, and, kissing her, then left, but the tears burned. The child has been sent to some relatives of her father's in New York.—N. Y. World.

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

The potato crop of Oregon is badly affected by the rot, and it is feared none can be wintered.

There are thirty-one blast furnaces and fourteen rolling-mills in Shenango Valley, Pa. Most of them have been idle for some time, and the workmen there are praying for better days.

The Zoological Museum at Warsaw is exceedingly rich in the department of higher animals. Its collections include 514 species of mammals, 3,276 of birds and 190 of reptiles and amphibians.

Two hundred and twenty-five miners employed at Coal Creek, in Anderson County, Tenn., have struck for an increase in wages of twenty-five per cent. The proprietors, resisting the demand, have shut down operations.

Dr. Royston Piggott mentions a couple of examples of extraordinary acuteness of vision. In one case, a person measured with the eye the diameter of Jupiter's satellites detected three of them with the naked eye, and their position, which he drew upon paper, exactly corresponding with that viewed through the telescope. In the second instance, an individual distinguished, at a distance of one long half a mile, two children ascending the sunny side of a hill, and was able to tell the color of their jackets. A good opera-glass verified his sight. The same person could see bullet marks at 350 yards.

A very novel and at the same time interesting experiment, according to the Lookout papers, is soon to be attempted in that city by Mr. Hollis, the superintendent of the works pump inventor. This experiment is to heat the whole city with steam, after the same manner as it is lighted with gas. Unfortunately the entire programme is not published, as it would no doubt be interesting reading. It is not though feasible to have one boiler do the job, but the city is to be divided into districts, and each district to have its separate boiler. Mains from each boiler are to run to the different houses, and all the occupant has to do is to turn on a faucet and obtain all the heat he wants.—Rochester (N. Y.) Times.

The negro vote is a large factor in elections. It was computed two years ago at ten and distributed as follows: Alabama, 80,000; Arkansas, 12,000; California, 500; Connecticut, 1,700; Delaware, 3,000; Florida, 15,000; Georgia, 50,000; Illinois, 5,000; Indiana, 4,200; Iowa, 1,100; Kansas, 5,000; Kentucky, 90,000; Louisiana, 95,000; Maine, 500; Maryland, 31,000; Massachusetts, 2,500; Michigan, 2,000; Minnesota, 110; Mississippi, 80,000; Missouri, 21,500; Nebraska, 140; Nevada, 100; New Hampshire, 1,000; New York, 20,000; North Carolina, 72,000; Ohio, 13,500; Oregon, 60; Pennsylvania, 11,000; Rhode Island, 900; South Carolina, 75,000; Tennessee, 8,000; Texas, 50,000; Vermont, 170; Virginia, 95,000; Wisconsin, 400; West Virginia, 3,000.

The London Engineer states that a few days ago a shaft wheel of three tons weight, nine feet in diameter, cast in one piece, and having worked for years as a part of a steam engine, was laid horizontally on two bales of timber in the yard of the West Hartlepool Cement Works, England; the wheel was left in a perfect condition at night, and was found next morning fractured in several places, without having been touched in any manner by any person or any article. Such a peculiar case is to be accounted for by the fact that, on the day previous, the sun's rays had heated the rim considerably, and the night being cold, the arms, having retained but little heat, contracted too rapidly, snapping from the boss and rim of the wheel.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

You children told to us the "Old, Old Story,"
Told it with flushing cheek and sparkling eye,
How from His home above in light and glory
The Son of God came down to die.

Told it while gleaming lights shone all around them,
While fragrant with the breath of flowers,
And hearts shrouded beneath the spell that bound them,
Were as the songs for the lord of earth!

As I then dreamed while the enchanted hours—
And saddle like fairies in a sense stolen,
The children came and were before my sight—
My fancy painted yet another vision
Of fields and shepherds, and a star in night.

I heard the sound of angels softly singing
All the sweet wonders of the holy birth
I saw the wise men myrrh and incense bringing Down to the manger for the lord of earth!

I saw the fair young child, the power discerning
Stand in the temple with a quiet grace,
Talking all wisdom, with men of learning
A light from Heaven upon His earnest face.

I saw the miracle, where servants carried,
In wide obedience to His word command,
Pure water, that while guests and bridegroom tarried,
Blushed into wine; beneath His lifted hand!

And then I thought, with tearful shame and sorrow,
How oft we grieve Him when as pledge to bear
The waters that fit cross in wine of gladness,
Making His Blood sacred with blessings rare;

I stood among the silent crowd, assembling
About the bier where lay the widow's child,
And heard His gracious voice with pity trembling,
"Call back her dead and cheer her anguish wild."

Then from my yearning heart recalled my baby
Where—dear to me—it lay, who first in love
Beneath the snows, and I thought that maybe,
In Heaven He would restore Him to my breast

Just as he came to me, once a sweet stranger,
Perhaps He'll place Him in my waiting arms,
Not grown into stately, white winged angel,
But full of dimpling smiles and baby charms.

Oh mothers, grieving over fair, dead faces,
Hushing as best you can, the heart's wild cry,
Be glad that in earth or Heaven's bright places
The little children walk for ever and I!

I followed Him that night of tears and sorrow
When those He loved forgot their Lord and slept;
I saw the coming of that dark to-morrow
And stood beside the cross where Mary wept

I heard His patient voice serenely pleading
"Father, forgive; they know not what they do"
I saw His sacred head all bowed and bleeding,
And conscience whispered: "This was done for you!"

Oh, wondrous love! that bore for us the scourging,
The bitter mocking and the cruel pain!
Oh, wondrous love! that gave the sinner singing
Back from our straying steps to Him again!

I saw Him in the tomb, and met Him risen
Again I heard the angel voices sing—
Hark! He is coming! Hear the trumpet blowing!
Mary—fair child and Heaven—answered King!

And ever as I walk the path before me,
Each day of pleasure and of pleasant ease,
This vision throws its holy influence o'er me—
The—old, old story—unless my memory plays
The Standard Bearer.

What Our Churches Cost Us.

Scribner for January contains an article with the above title in which various comparisons are made to prove the relative cheapness of church work. We quote the author's summing up:

"We have found that for a long half a century on the average church men the average business establishment; less for the subsistence of those who perform the ministerial service, and less for their savings and accumulations; less to the community, and less to the individual patron. The church is worked more cheaply than any self-supporting business, because it is worked at no higher figure than the bare cost, and more often at less than the cost, as a semi-charitable institution; and, as a large part of our population, a missionary society. As dispassionately and dryly as becomes the statement of statistical facts, we have come that no such pecuniary return is made on investments in an education for the church as on investments regularly made in other lines; that no such compensation is granted by the wealthiest churches to the ablest pastors, as is commonly granted by large secular corporations to those at their head; that service in the church is more highly paid than service in the church, even where the same individual serves in each; that converts and theatres cost more than churches, that cruder articles of luxury, and even our very dogs, make a larger figure in our expenses than the subsistence of the ministers of the churches; and, finally, that it costs Christians less to support their religious institutions than it anciently cost the Jews to support theirs, and less than it now costs the heathen to support theirs.

Pray for Your Children.

You may have children who are wanderers from home. Well, you can reach them by way of the Throne. There was an old Scotchman who wrote us a letter asking us to look out for his lost son Willie, who had run away from home, and it was very deeply troubled by the case, for that is the name of my own son. So I told Mr. Sawyer to watch for him, and for six months he did so, but all in vain; we could not find him. All this time that old Scotch father and mother were praying for the lost boy; and last Monday, at the temperance meeting, among the men who rose for prayer was that same lost Willie. He told us his sad experience; said he had just gallopped on to destruction; but now the Lord has saved him. Oh! how happy these parents will be to hear the good news! And shall we not all believe that God hears the prayers of parents for their wandering sons?

Take your children to God and pray for them. Pray for them by name. Ask God to bless John and help him to be a good boy amongst his playmates. Ask God to bless Mary and help her to overcome her faults. Encourage your children to tell their troubles, and to pray for help to bear them, for the troubles of the children are just as hard for them as any troubles are for you.

Do not let all the religion be outside of the family; take it into the home. Religion was in the home a thousand years before it was ever established in a church or place of public worship. Read the Word of God; have the children recite verses from it; study the Sunday-school lessons at morning prayers; speak well of the minister, and, instead of finding fault with his preaching, cut the same meat up a little finer for the children, and they will be sure to enjoy it. Make the Sabbath the pleasantest day of the week, and give the family worship the best hour of the day—i. e., the morning.—Dr. Talmage, One of Mr. Moody's Recent Sermons.

Some Scholarly Answers.

At a recent opening of the medical session of Glasgow University, Prof. Metsill Anderson said few would doubt that the examinations of candidates for degrees in medicine in the classes was called for, but if proof were required it might be found in the answers given to the following questions submitted to candidates by one of the examining boards:

Question—What is meant by the antiquity of man? Answer—The wickedness of man.

Q.—The letters of Junius? A.—Letters written in the month of June.

Q.—The Crusades? A.—A war against the Roman Catholics during the last century.

Q.—The first merchant? A.—The first hour of the day.

Q.—To speak prudently? A.—To speak about iron.

Q.—A Gordian knot? A.—The arms of the Gordon family.

Q.—The Star Chamber? A.—Place for viewing the stars.

Q.—To sit on the woolsack? A.—To be seated on a sack of wool.

Q.—A solecism? A.—A hook on the sun.

Q.—The year of jubilee? A.—Leap year.

They could, the Professor added, have appreciated this last answer all the more heartily had it emanated from one of the female medical students.

The Jews are awakening to the necessity of education among their people. The Messenger says: "The pressing need of Judaism in America is education for young and old. Hebrew schools and well-attached gratuitous every place of worship supply the beginning of a system which, properly extended, will embrace Hebrew literature, the Talmud, the rabbinical lectures on Jewish history and literature and a course of Hebrew instruction adapted to the special wants of students."

A Prime Remedy for a Painful Disease.

The pangs endured by the chronic are painfully familiar to physicians. The exertion of a certain abnormal mind current to the blood and the resulting suffering of nerves and joints. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, being a superb tonic and alterative, certainly assists to expel the impurity, and by removing the cause, allays the pain and fever. Nothing else does this. That it is a most successful remedy for rheumatism, gout and nervous ills, as well as a reliable means of counteracting those disorders, be the latter hereditary or acquired, certificates emanating from those whom it has cured, and attested by the highest authorities of high repute, fully attest. It is likewise a powerful curative of dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint, urinary troubles and debility. Use it faithfully, and a speedy and permanent relief will be the result.

Come Now and Let Us Reason Together.

Why do people, as frequently as they do, say, "I suppose your Golden Medical Discovery is good for me, but as it has been the practice of leading physicians to keep the virtues of their remedies a secret, I prefer to use those with the composition of which I am acquainted?" Such people are informed that Dr. Pierce has published the formula of his Golden Medical Discovery, and attested it under oath, before leading medical men, and has also published a full treatise on the diseases for which it is recommended. In this treatise will be found the analyses given by eminent chemists, of the various barks from which the active principles of his "Discovery" are obtained. Any one who can read can thus learn what he is taking when he uses Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, for it contains no secret drugs. Its ingredients are known to all medical men, and are highly commended by them for the cure of all chronic diseases of the liver, blood, lungs, and kidneys, when combined as they are in this "Discovery." Its sale is enormous, and it is curing the people wonderfully. Send for pamphlet containing numerous testimonials of its cures. Address World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

Household Hints.

Lemons can be kept sweet and fresh for months by putting them in a clean, tight cask or jar and covering with cold water. The water must be changed as often as every other day, and the cask kept in a cool place.

Four sore lips and eyes mingle one teaspoon level full of sulphate of zinc, or white vitriol, dissolved in one pint of rain water. Moisten your lips with the liquid and apply it to the part affected, two or three times a day, until a cure is effected.—N. Y. Herald.

A year's use of a pint of black pepper will prevent gray or bull hairs from spotting, if stirred into the first water in which they are washed. It will also prevent the colors running, when washing black or colored cambrics or muslins, and the water is not injured by it, but just as soft as before the pepper was put in.

Oysters and Macaroni.—Slowly stew some macaroni in good gravy till tender; then lay it in a pie-dish, put in a good layer of fresh oysters; add pepper, salt, a little grated lemon-peel, and a tablespoonful of cream, or olive oil if preferred. Strew bread crumbs over the top and brown in a quick oven, serve with plenty of lemon juice.

Meet housekeepers throw away the leaves and green tops of celery. There is a better way than this. Dry them thoroughly in the oven, then pulverize to a fine powder, and they make a very delicious seasoning for soup, the aroma and strength of the celery being remarkably preserved. After being pulverized, the powder should be kept in a jar or closed bottle to preserve the strength.

Kossuth Pudding.—One-half cup suet chopped fine; raisin the same; one-half cup molasses; one-half cup sugar; one cup warm water; two eggs; two teaspoonfuls of soda; a little salt; all kinds of spice; flour and bread-crumbs to make stiff as cake. Steam three hours. Sauce—One cup sugar; one-half cup butter; one egg; one lemon, grated; one teaspoonful nutmeg; one-half cup boiling water. Cream the butter and sugar; add the egg well beaten, then the lemon and nutmeg, beat well ten minutes; add slowly the boiling water; then put over the fire; let come to a boil, but not boil, stir constantly.

Fish and Macaroni.—Boil the macaroni in water until tender, drain it and cut it into short pieces. Remove the skin and bones from any kind of white boiled fish, tear it into small pieces, and mix it with the macaroni. Season with salt, pepper and a little lemon juice. Heat this in a saucepan, pour it into a deep dish, spread butter over it, and put in the fish and macaroni. When hot pour it out in a dish, heaping it in the centre; sprinkle powdered crackers over it and lake for a light brown color in the oven.

Remember that the wings of turkeys, geese and chickens should never be thrown away. Many people, especially in the country, keep them simply to brush off the stove or range, but there is nothing better to wash and clean windows. Chamois or buckskin is very good, but soap are better and cost nothing, and their use is an economy—utilizing that which would otherwise be thrown away. The are excellent to clean the hearth or stoves, to dust furniture, but best of all to wash windows, because the corners can be easily and perfectly cleaned by them, leaving no lint behind, as when cloths are used. The three wings alone to spread on paste when papering walls. There is nothing that does that kind of work better.—Christian Union.

Smoothing Bog Meadows.

One of the best times to roll the ice to work on a bog meadow, to cut off the bogs and to smooth the surface of the ground, is during the winter season. When the bogs are frozen. The large bogs, which in vulgar parlance are spoken of as "nigger-heads," when frozen can be cut off with less labor than when they are not frozen. We have had a man working on our bog meadow for several weeks. A strong and sharp log hoe was procured, with which he cut off the bogs, small and small, even with the surface of the ground. The bogs were then pitched on wagons and drawn to the upland, and scattered around fruit trees. By allowing the bogs to remain on the surface of the ground during freezing weather, so that they will freeze and thaw several times before spring, the vitality of the roots of the bog-grass will be so nearly destroyed that the grass will give no trouble the next season. Next spring or summer those bogs will be plowed under. When partially covered with moist dirt they will decay rapidly, and furnish an immense amount of humus and vegetable matter to the soil. After the bogs are drawn off the meadow, the surface will be so smooth that a mowing machine can be driven over it in any direction. Early in the spring we propose to sow red top grass seed on all the bare places. Before cold weather came on we had large ditches cut to carry off all the surplus water. As there was but a little descent from one side of the meadow to the other, a ditch about five feet broad and three feet deep, with sloping sides, was cut in the lowest place directly through the meadow, thus securing an outlet of large capacity. Such a ditch turnished a great many wagon-loads of muck. Branch ditches were then cut from this main ditch to the dry ground. As the bottom is so soft in many places that a digger would sink into the plastic muck out of sight, the ditches will have to be kept open. Hot such large ditches yield immense quantities of excellent muck, which is hauled to the upland and spread without incurring the labor and expense of hauling it over and over again when the muck is mingled with stable manure in a compost heap. AT HOME.

THE Pennsylvania Democratic State Central Committee met at Harrisburg, on the 22d, and issued an address to the people of Pennsylvania, declaring their belief that "Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, were, on the 7th day of November last, elected President and Vice-President of the United States," and calling upon the members of both Houses of Congress to adopt such lawful measures as may lead to the official declaration of that result.

THE forger Cox, who, in 1874, was sentenced to the Massachusetts State Prison for eight years, committed suicide, on the 22d, by taking muriatic acid and Paris green.

ON the 23d, the Florida Supreme Court unanimously granted the answer of the Canvassing Board, and granted a peremptory order to the Board to swear Vans from the face of the returns.

A REMARKABLE meteoric phenomenon occurred in portions of Kansas, Northern Missouri, Southern Iowa, Central Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, on the evening of the 21st. A brilliant meteor moved across the sky, resembling a comet with a long and luminous tail. It moved rapidly and exhibited with a loud report, in some places, being apparently split up into numerous fragments.

SEVERAL cases of robbery lately occurred in the National Treasury Department. A package containing nearly $12,000, directed to a Chicago National Bank, or Banker, in exchange for another, on every way unobstructed, and another package, addressed thereafter, which was found, on opening it, to contain green goods, or waste paper cut in the form of greenbacks and bank notes.

IN the course of conversation with a representative of the Associated Press on the 24th, the President said he had no personal knowledge of a Democratic conspiracy in South Carolina, and was not apprehensive of armed collisions in connection with the Presidency. It seemed to him that the people desired peace, and a fair count of the Electoral vote in the Southern contested States. The reports of the several committees would shortly end the Electoral affairs, and have a tendency to solve the existing difficulties. It was desirable to establish the actual fact of the election of either Hayes or Tilden, for neither could feel satisfied if there were any doubt of his election, because, in such a case, his position as President would be compromised, the requisite general support. The President remarked that he was anxious for the coming of the 4th of March, when he would gladly give way to his successor and be free from official care. Before re-establishing himself at his old home in Galena, Ill., he proposed making a voyage to the West Indies, visiting Havana and other points of interest. He had deferred his voyage to Europe till June, in view of the necessity of returning to the country before then, the President said he should promptly recognize whoever should be declared to be successful.

THE investigation into the alleged tampering with the mails in the New York postoffice was commenced on the 23d. Postmaster Jewett, being sworn, stated that he had no knowledge that his letters were tampered with in the New York postoffice. He had formerly been a conveyancer, later purporting to come as a clerk in the New York postoffice, stating that "Little Tea Kettle" at work on his letters, and he had another look out. He had watched and had them tampered with, found the flaps of some of them wrinkled, as if exposed to steam and opened, showed such letters to various persons, who invariably said they had been opened.

THE Coroner of St. Elizabeth, near Billette, Canada, was burned on the night of the 20th, and thirteen persons, nearly all members of his family.

THE Washington dispatch of the 26th to the Speaker had replied to the letter of President Orton, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, asking to be excused from appearing before the Morrison Investigating Committee with certain papers and telegrams. Randall said he had no power to excuse. It was for the House to determine what action should be taken.

ON the 27th, Cronin, the Tilden Elector from Oregon, delivered the Electoral vote of that State to Vice-President Ferry, who declined to give a receipt on account two returns from the State.

TALLAHASSEE (Fla.) dispatch of the 28th says that, in obedience to the orders of the State Supreme Court, Attorney-General Cocke had made a canvass of the vote on the 27th, and the other members had reconvened in caucus. His personal care threw and Tilden 64 majority. This he filed with the Clerk's office, in obedience to the order of the Court. Subsequently the other members of the Board agreed to release, and the full Board met, counted their canvass and gave Drew a majority of 195 and the Hayes Electors Cocke files a protest.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Columbia dispatch of the 22d says the Democratic House had adjourned to-day. This action leaves two State governments acting upon their own responsibility. Chamberlain made a large number of nominations for county officers, which were confirmed by the Senate in executive session. Hampton had services of his friends, and was promising also to organize county governments.

A special to the New York Times says United States District Attorney Corbin appeared before the South Carolina Supreme Court, on the 27th, in accordance with the decision of the Court, denying the motion to remove the case of the recent proceedings against Hayes-Electors from the Supreme to the United States Court, and requiring defendants to amend their answer. Mr. Corbin denied that he had made any answer. He had made a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction. A heated discussion followed, during which Judge Willard stated that the whole course of the respondents in all the cases against the Board at Canvassers had been calculated to bring the Court and its decisions into contempt. Chief-Justice Moses was quite ill from exertion of the lungs.

ABROAD.

ON the 25th, the Porte solemnly promulgated the new Constitution. This declares the individuality of the Turkish Empire, guarantees the free exercise of religious belief and worship, institutes a two legislative bodies, and in other respects pattern after the constitutions of monarchical Europe.

RECENT arrivals from San Domingo announce the breaking out of another revolution in that island. President Gonzalez has relinquished his office on the 9th and embarked for Puerto Rico. Ex-President Baez had been called to the presidency.

IN an interview with Lord Salisbury, the British representative to the Turkish Conference, on the 29th, Mithat Pasha utterly refused to accept the proposition for an international commission to supervise and the proposed reforms. Lord Salisbury at once telegraphed for a steamer to take him to Athens, in case the Turkish Government remained unyielding.

CONSTANTINOPLE telegrams of the 28th say the Porte had issued a decree annulling the former decree ordering the Ottoman fleet on shall. The Mahtey had decided to reject certain of the proposals of the Conference, and, in the event of war, had determined to expend the whole fleet, Greek, Bulgarian and Christian subjects of Turkey.

JAPAN advises, received in San Francisco on the 26th, report a destructive fire in Yokio which burned over 5,000 houses valued at $10,000,000.

ACCORDING to dispatches of the 27th Austria had proposed to Servia the mobilization of 30,000 troops in Croatia, Transylvania and Dalmatia. The Russian fleet had been ordered to assemble at Duckstoff, to be in readiness to repel an unprovoked offensive movement on the part of the Turkish fleet. Gen. Nikolas, the Russian Commander-in-Chief, had issued an order of the day.

CONGRESSIONAL.

ON the 22d, the resolution relative to Mr. Cronin's appointment as a President Elector in Oregon, was taken up in the Senate, and agreed to without division. It provides that the question shall be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to inquire into the eligibility of J. W. Watts (on the Republican Electoral ticket), and that he forthwith bring the appointment of said Elector and pitched Electors, and report the same to the Senate. A Conference Committee was appointed on the bill to provide for the sale of certain Cherokee strip lands in the Indian Territory. The bill as a resolution was adopted in the House directly reviving the Appropriation Committee to report in the Deficiency bill a provision to pay the widow of the late Speaker Blair the sum equal to the pay and mileage of the deceased from the date of his decease to the end of the present Congress. Messrs. Knott, Sparks, Tucker, Marsh, Bernard Hill, Seelye and Monroe were announced by the Speaker as the committee to escort the Speaker and Judges of the Supreme Court, and the members of the House in counting the votes for President and Vice-President and announcing the Electoral votes. MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

OLIVER GRIFFITH, of the firm of O. Griffith & Sons, Jackson, died on the night of the 21st, from the effects of falling on a slippery sidewalk, on the preceding Saturday night, while returning home from business. What makes the case of particular interest, aside from his being an old and respected citizen, is the fact that several persons passed him while lying on the sidewalk, and refused assistance, saying that he was drunk.

TAXES are several old laws lying around on the statute books, that are not used much, and there would seem to be no good reason why they should not be closed. But this kind in Michigan, on the strength of which a Grand Rapids boarding-house woman was yanked into court the other day and fined for cooking dinner on Sunday.

THE attention of the public has been called to the foolhardy manner in which the poor people of Charlevoix, Emmet and other counties in the northern portion of the State, have been in the habit of the location of this country was opposed to negro suffrage. There was a huge demonstration of popularity and for years the expense. Gov. Baldwin refused to sell on the land, thus leaving them entirely on their labor for support. Last Autumn citizens of the same place also testified that he heard of no individuals who had died of starvation or cases of destitution. The county authorities have already expended all its funds for the relief of the destitute, and the condition is becoming the whiter and spring, and there must be a large contingent relief, or great suffering and starvation will be the result.

THE hunting men of Detroit are making a strong effort to induce the National Sewing Machine Company to build the gun. Such a project is certainly feasible.

AN explosion lately occurred at the Port Huron Powder Works in Worth's Hollow, near that place, which resulted in the death of George Bishop, a colored man employed by the company.

A CONVENTION man named Barnes, a mill wright by occupation, recently lost a team of horses and on the evening of the same day died from fits while the sun was seventy-two years old. He was a native of Maine and leaves a widow and two children.

THE total vote is 8,425,977, against 6,457,315 in 1872, and 5,710,708 in 1868.

LEAF PAINTING.—The old method of taking impressions of leaves and delicate plants and ferns by using a sheet of oiled paper saturated with lamp-smoke and passing the object upon it, has given place to the white paper, must give way to a very excellent refinement of the process. A sheet of paper is oiled on one side only and then rubbed four times. The leaf is then pressed between the second folds where the oil reaches it only by infiltration through the tissues of the paper. Removed thence it is placed between two forms of clear white paper and being pressed every with the hand, two almost invisible hinges are obtained, which being cheapness may be brought out by stirring fine black-lead powder over them. If powdered crayons or colors are used, natural effects of color may be produced, if a pale rose is to be given with the black-lead or crayons, it will serve to fix the image on the application of sufficient heat to melt it.

THERE was an hiatus in dazzling the eyes of the ticket collector with it. He was only a railway official. But I took care to pull on my glove and button it over my cuff. Daring Burglaries.

THE little town of Astoria, on Long Island, just across from New York city, is terribly excited over two very daring burglaries committed there on Friday night. These men marched through the streets in a thickly-settled neighborhood, and were in no way interrupted or interfered with in their operations. The first visit was paid to the Sanswick House, where Mr. Green, the proprietor, was asleep. When he woke up he saw four men, with the lower portion of their faces masked with handkerchiefs, standing near the bed. They were armed with revolvers, and ordered Green to surrender instantly, or they would blow his brains out. Not caring to risk a struggle with such formidable assailants, Mr. Green told the men to proceed with their plundering operations, but to spare the lives of his family and the other inmates of the house. The ruffians told him they knew he had a revolver, because they found cartridges in the bar-room below, and demanded its surrender. The revolver, which Green had under his pillow, was handed to them, and then, after stationing a man over the frightened householder and his wife, with a cocked pistol and instructions to shoot them if they moved, the robbers proceeded to ransack the apartment. They took everything within their reach, including one or two coats, gamboons, and a small sum of money. They also carried off a valuable black overcoat belonging to Mr. Green's brother, leaving a tattered and worn-out thirteen one of their own in its place. They left to enter the adjoining room occupied by Mr. Green's sister-in-law, who was ill. Mr. Green begged them not to disturb her, and the woman and with them consent entered the room first and apprised her of the state of affairs. The robbers took very little from this room, and were about to enter another, when Green told them that his brother George lived there; that he had been robbed of $500 six weeks before, and that he was probably prepared for another attempt, and might make it unpleasant for them. The gang consulted, and then tramped down stairs with their plunder, inclining a watchful eye as they took from a small closet in one of the hall bedrooms. In the bar-room they stopped for some liquor, filled their pockets with cigars and carried off a bottle of claret to regale themselves with in the intervals between their labors. Before leaving they again entered Green's room, calling him by name, and stood there was $500 in gold in the house and that he must surrender it if he wanted his life. Green protested that he had nothing of the kind in his possession, and the robbers finally left, making the proprietor close the doors after them and look up the house as if they had been customers leaving at a late hour. The whole value of the swag obtained here was about $200.

The gang then proceeded to the residence of Mr. Hiller, on Vernon street, and went through the same performance. The whole family was aroused into a room, and placed under guard, while the remainder of the crowd ransacked the house. Meantime, Miss Lizzie Hiller, the eldest daughter, aged nineteen, had become annoyed by the noise, and, opening the door at her room leading into the hall, looked out and the ruffians answered. "Put your head in that door, young lady, or I'll knock it off for you." Alarmed at this reply, she shut the door, but immediately opened by two men carrying revolvers, and wearing handkerchiefs over the lower portion of their faces. They were told to be quiet, or if she didn't want to be shot, and then commenced ransacking her bureau and closets, helping themselves to such of the contents as suited them. Miss Hiller, who is a vivacious young lady, could not calmly see her wardrobe thus unceremoniously tumbled over and trodden under foot, and upbraided the ruffians in no gentle terms, for their heartless conduct. As they turned to go, one of them noticed a fine pair of ladies' slides hanging on the wall. The fellow insulted a moment, but Miss Hiller said, bitterly, "Take them, by all means, gentlemen; it is a fine night for skating." Enraged by her good-natured sarcasm, the fellow turned with an oath, raised his pistol and threatened to fire if she did not keep quiet. So confounded were the burglars by her spirited demonstration, that they neglected to take many things that they might otherwise have carried off. Miss Hiller tried several times to get to the window and throw it up, in order to give the alarm, but was prevented. Before leaving, one of the robbers noticed the glittering of a ring on her forefinger, and, seizing her hand, wrenched it violently from her. The burglars made a clean sweep of the other rooms, on the upper floor, carrying off coats, overcoats, clothing, three gold watches, jewelry, silverware, etc., to the value of $2,000. They even took Mr. Hiller's boots, which had been polished and placed outside his door for the morning. In rummaging the nursery, one of the burglars, apparently a green hand, came upon a gilded toy savings-bank, and, mistaking it for gold, said to his companion, "This is solid gold, Jack," at the same time throwing the plaything into a pile of goods near by. The gang seemed to be under the direction of one man, whom they termed "boss," who stood on the stairs and called out his orders to the others. Several efforts were made by the frightened family to give the alarm, but they were always encountered by the watchful guards, revolvers in hand, threatening to kill them if they made the slightest outcry. The burglars broke mirrors, smashed furniture, and stripped most of the upper rooms of all their valuables, last did not meddle with anything in the parlor or ground floor. Finally, after a stay of an hour and a half, they decamped with their plunder, after warning the family that on the first attempt at alarm they would return and murder them. Mr. Hiller, who had almost all of his clothing stolen, had some difficulty in getting himself in a presentable condition, but finally sallied forth to the police station, where the vigilant Dogherries of the local force were found congratulating themselves on the escape of the thieves. It is unnecessary to add that none of the gang were arrested.—N. Y. (Dec. 23) Dispatch to Boston Globe.

BIRTHDAY VERSES.

WRITTEN IN A CONSERVATORY.

Dear song of old in last and last!
How comes king in still hour
Hung drooping of his cooling wing
And low in life dreams, lethal
Into the sea-like ring of power

Thick, for in sorrow as for sight,
And people his fancies and his theme
To who counted the jewel bright,
The leaves spell would never smile.
The gem of ocean held his own

Those awful powers on man that wait,
Oh make the heart of your king
To hold but as half of state
A magic ring that seizure fate
With six a crowning birthday bring.

Therein are all four powers rare—
Dead silver, summer scarlet blaze,
Spring's emerald, and, the last all seen in fair,
Fall's preserved quiet—dowered to bear
A heart of life befriended and brave.

To him the simple spell who knows—
The spirit of the ring in sway
From heaven's fire ring to earth's rose—
And, put all variants are three
That fly its mandates to obey.

Half he that sits in a stockyard will
Dispose of his cattle, or voyage to be,
From him the reason he slipping still,
And dupe on the ground of his fancies
Into the inexorable sea.

James Russell Lowell, in January Atlantic.

A BRILLIANT ADVENTURE.

THE time was almost a fortnight before Christmas. There were not many travelers, and I had a compartment in the early tidal train to myself. My destination was Hyde, my errand to convey from my father—a London specialist—to his agent in that city a very valuable brilliant ring. "The diamonds in it are worth close upon a penny," my father had said to me, "so I hope you will take special care of the ring, Ned, and neither lose it on the way nor allow yourself to be robbed of it." I smiled a little superciliously as my father spoke. As if it were at all likely that I should either lose it or allow it to be taken from me! I was just turned one-and-twenty, and had had no right to speak to me as if I were still a boy.

I had put the ring safe in an inner pocket of my waistcoat, as I took care to assure myself from time to time. I had not seen it since my father put it into the little well-lined box, in which it was still shut, when I found myself in the first class carriage, and had got myself comfortably established in one corner, under the warming cover, the thought struck me that I might as well have another look at the ring. There could be no harm in that, you know. I took the box out of its lining place and opened it. My eyes were dazzled as I looked. Then I let the darling in its nest of purple velvet. Who could have resisted the pleasure of taking it out and trying it on? Certainly not I. I put on one finger and then on another. I thrust it between the first and second finger of my right hand, it would not have fitted me better. It looked lovely on.

Now, I don't want you to think of it, was there anyone there to see? I looked at the ring, then my fingers. I pulled the ring on my finger. Then I put the fingers into my pocket. As I was about to withdraw my hand, I remembered to put my glove on just then; so I minced and smoked, and watched the many-colored rays of light that flashed from the ring, and was pleased with the black-lead or crayons, it will serve to fix the image on the application of sufficient heat to melt it.

There was no harm in dazzling the eyes of the ticket collector with it. He was only a railway official. But I took care to pull on my glove and button it over my cuff. LEAF PAINTING.—The old method of taking impressions of leaves and delicate plants and ferns by using a sheet of oiled paper saturated with lamp-smoke and passing the object upon it, has given place to the white paper, must give way to a very excellent refinement of the process. A sheet of paper is oiled on one side only and then rubbed four times. The leaf is then pressed between the second folds where the oil reaches it only by infiltration through the tissues of the paper. Removed thence it is placed between two forms of clear white paper and being pressed every with the hand, two almost invisible hinges are obtained, which being cheapness may be brought out by stirring fine black-lead powder over them. If powdered crayons or colors are used, natural effects of color may be produced, if a pale rose is to be given with the black-lead or crayons, it will serve to fix the image on the application of sufficient heat to melt it.

THERE was an hiatus in dazzling the eyes of the ticket collector with it. He was only a railway official. But I took care to pull on my glove and button it over my cuff. Then I looked at myself in the table given below. One country is lacking in the returns from Mississippi and from one county in Alabama, only the majority declared for Tildenbills, where the people did not vote directly for President, the voters for Governor at the election in October is given in the table. It will be seen that returns are made of the vote for Peter Cooper, the Greenback candidate, and Green Clay Smith, Prohibitionist in a large number of States. The votes in Florida, Louisiana and South Carolina are given as declared by the Returning Boards of those States.

The total vote is 8,425,977, against 6,457,315 in 1872, and 5,710,708 in 1868.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

[From our own Correspondent]

To the Editor of the Sentinel:

New York, Dec 30, 1875

One more day of the long and eventful and full record Centennial year, and I, in common with the thousands of a vast host of your readers, will be glad to see it pass into history. If the latter all-powerful, has forgotten me by the time it has finished with the year, I shall not be surprised, but if I am remembered by any of your many readers, I shall be glad to see the last of 1875. I have had a pretty hard time of it during the year, and I am not sorry to see it go. I have had my share of the ups and downs of life, and I have had my share of the sunshine and shadow that falls to the lot of mortals, but I have had more than my share of the latter, and I am glad to see it go. I am glad to see it go, because I am glad to see the last of it. I am glad to see it go, because I am glad to see the last of it. I am glad to see it go, because I am glad to see the last of it

INDUSTRIAL, STATISTICAL AND TECHNICAL.

The temperature of milk just from the udder is about thirty-eight degrees.

The total exports of New York since Jan. 1 have been $25,527,675; for the corresponding period last year, $38,324,917.

It is announced in the Japanese papers that iron has been discovered in the sacred mountain of Kogosan. Its existence has been suspected for many years, but superstition forbade the miners mining it. Operations for working the ore will now be immediately commenced.

An unfortunate strike of the cabinet-makers in Dublin is in danger of destroying that branch of business, not only in the city, but in Ireland. The workmen have been on a strike for over twenty weeks, in consequence of the employers refusing to grant an advance of sixpence cents a week demanded by the men. There are now men employed in the city mostly all partaking in the strike.

Explosive substances have recently been put to a novel use in Austria. Cartridges of dynamite are planted at a depth of nearly ten feet at a proper distance from the vines, about the roots of which the earth was to be loosened, and upon explosion separated the earth for a distance of nearly six feet so that it could be permeated by the air and moisture. Here is a suggestion for enterprising farmers.

The Malays resort to a very curious method of killing the rhinoceros. The animal, being fond of wallowing in the mud, will find a spot in a morass where the soil is about the consistency of dough. Here he will remain for a long time, and when observed by the Malays they will approach him cautiously from behind, pile coal and other material over him and set it afire. The intense heat bakes the mud so that the rhinoceros cannot escape, and then, the fire being continued, bakes the animal. A curious coincidence is here found, for the remains of a rhinoceros were recently discovered with every evidence of having been disposed of in the same manner by savages of the same country previous to the introduction of fire arms.

M. Hervas has recently suggested a mode of preventing glass on roads, etc., which, if experience demonstrates its practicability, will be found both simple and useful, and by no means expensive. Sand is to be used largely in the composition of the glass, and this is to be mixed with the sand previous to mortar with the water that is now employed in the usual process. The advantage of the proposition is explained by the fact that a small quantity of arsenic, sulphuret of antimony or chloride of calcium. This, he thinks, will form a pattern of crust of considerable resistance, which, while not for several days, and which will hinder both the drying of the soil and its disintegrating by vehicles, etc. As the sand would be mixed with the glass of woods, and thus on passing roads and would protect the glass.

A Practical Boy.

"Tommy," observed a Nelson street father to his son, a youth of thirteen years, "you must learn to help about the house mum always." Mr. Crawford is a young man with "decided opinions" with regard to Tommy's duties. The time was a Wednesday evening. Tommy had been skating since school, and was now anxiously waiting his supper. The announcement came upon him with disagreeable force.

"Is that all mother wants around here to-night?" he repentantly inquired.

"Thomas" cried his mother in a voice of horror.

Thomas having caused his mind something of the burden, proceeded to the woodpile without further remark.

He was not in good humor as he looked around for the ax, and articles foreign to the search were moved with graceless haste.

"This is a regular dog's life," he mentally ejaculated. "First it's Sunday night, an' then it is Wednesday night, an' then it's Friday night, an' every little while an extra night thrown in. I don't see what's the use of a girl about the house. If I've got to eat wood every time that feller comes, I'll know the reason why. I won't be put on like this. I ain't goin' to be made a park inside of, is George, for all the Crawfords and Fannys on earth. It's all nice enough for them to be in there toasting their shins, an' nellie sickish, but I notice that I have got to do all the work. It's played out, by Jinks; I ain't that kind of lumpkin. I'd just like to have somebody tell me;" he added, looking round for the person in question, how much of the family an' oranges either stuff that Fanny gets that I don't. Not one whiff, by gracious! an' a single solitary whiff. An' here I op wood for her an' him night after ght, an' if it wasn't for me they'd ake all the peels outen their heads, they are awful scented pair, they ioning his remarks with this any observation on his sister and emonymy, he worked away at the wood until the amount necessary was prepared. About seven o'clock Mr. Crawford's knock sounded at the door. Fanny's mother was to have let him in, but Tommy volunteered his services. He escorted the young gentleman into the front room, and then backing himself against the door, he pointed to the stove which was throwing out a most welcome heat, and sternly inquired:

"Is that what you'd call a good one?"

"Hardly."

"I s'pose not. Now who do you s'pose made that fire?"

"Why—I—I suppose—why I don't know," said Mr. Crawford, apparently embarrassed by the question.

"No? Well, I can tell you. I made that fire. I cut the wood for it. I cut the wood and make every fire you have here. I've been doing it all the while you've come here, and you an' Fan have sat by it and toasted yourselves, and ate candy, and talked nonsense. You an' Fan have had all the comfort of it, an' I've done all the work, except part of it. An' not one smell of them candies an' oranges have I had — not a living smell." The unhappy boy knit his eyebrows, and instinctively drew up his hands. Scarcely less disturbed appeared Mr. Crawford, young man. He glanced uneasily from the fireman to the stove. But he made no reply. He waited apprehensively for what was to follow.

"I'll bet you've got a pound of assorted candies in your clothes this minute for Fan."

This came so directly in the form of an interrogation, that Mr. Crawford unhesitatingly nodded.

"I knew it bought," pursued Fanny's brother. "Now I want to tell you that if this fire business is to be continued on by me, there's got to be a different arrangement of awards. If not, today were recently discovered upon examination of having been disposed of in the same manner I mentioned before. candies or oranges."

"Why—why—I—I hardly would like to do that, Tommy. I got these for Fanny, you know."

"Yes, I know," said Tommy, grimly. "Then I'm sure you come up here again I shall expect to see your bulging pocks over your shoulder."

Mr. Crawford looked aghast.

"Tommy," he expostulated, "you wouldn't come back on me like that? I'll pay you for doing it."

"Oh! What will you pay?"

"I'll give you fifty cents a week."

"Hope to die?"

"Yes," said Mr. Crawford, eagerly.

"Then I am just your cheese," said the youth, the hard lines melting entirely out of his face. "There's nothing mean about me, but I don't want to be always in the dark. This thing has to be settled some way or another, an' it was out of the fire and of me, now that it is settled I'll just scratch the mark every time, and if I don't make that stove rare right upon the hottest days, I am a bald-headed leper without a surgeon."

And with a flourish expressive of the deepest earnestness, he stalked out of the room. —Detroit News.

Seal-Catching.

The prosecution of the seal fishery off the coast of Newfoundland involves more danger and hardship than is generally known. About three weeks after leaving port the seals are "struck," and are frequently found in such numbers as to blacken the ice for miles around. The seal hunters leave their vessels in either punts or by direct jumping on the ice, according to the ship's position. Their dress usually consists of a heavy "Guernsey frock," flannel cap, sou'wester, heavy pilot-cloth trousers, and rubber overalls stuffed into long sealskins. Their arms are a sculping-knife and a long pole with a gaff at the end called a "bat." The seal is easily dispatched by a single blow of this rude weapon on the skull. With the sculping knife the skinning, oftentimes pelt is removed from the carcass, which is left on the ice. The cry of the seal when approached by its human enemy is most piteous, and bluff and hardy hunters have often been known to hesitate before wielding the fatal blow, especially if the pleading seal is guarding its young. In that feeble Arctic atmosphere, and when the body of the seal is a long distance from the vessel, the hunters are often benighted when storms arise and open a channel in the ice that separates them from their craft. Sometimes the vessel has to bear away for safety, and many of the crew perish from cold and hunger unless luckily picked up by some other vessel. At other times, when the ice grows weak, they remain for hours together immersed to the knees, or perhaps to the middle of the body, on frail cakes of ice. If they should survive this dreadful torture and be rescued, the evil of frost-burn awaits them, and at the close of the homeward voyage their limbs are at the mercy of the surgeon's knife.—St. Louis Republican.

Transfusion of Blood.

About half a century ago, a great discovery was heralded in medical science, namely, the transfusion of blood from one individual to another, by which process, it was displayed, the sick and weak were at once to be made well and strong, and even old people rejuvenated, in the manner of youthful blood into their veins and arteries. At that time the medical papers reported the most astounding results and prophecies of still more astounding re-mirabilities, which were, however, soon proved futile, and the excitement gradually died away, and before long the whole subject was almost forgotten. But it was too important to be neglected by the medical profession, and it has been revived in Europe, notably in France and England. Recently at a clime in one of the Manchester (England) hospitals, the attending surgeon came to the bed of a young patient who had lost so much blood by the amputation of a limb that he became moribund, his death being momentarily expected. The surgeon told his class that this was one of the rare cases in which the life of an individual could be saved by transfusion of blood, and at once a noble medical student offered himself for the experiment, and allowed over sixteen ounces of his blood to be transferred into the veins of the dying patient. The result was perfectly satisfactory; the sufferer revived, in two hours afterward he recognized people, and he was soon on the way to recovery. This incident, being published in the newspapers, has given occasion to the renewal of the discussion among semi-scientific and quasi medical editors, and, as in the beginning of this century, when the subject was first agitated, all kinds of absurd ideas are being entertained, such as that the old can be made young again by the influence of the transfused blood; the weak can be made strong; the sick healthy; and even leal-tempered people can be made fault-like by transfusion of sheep's blood, and cowards courageous by the infusion of the blood of a game cock or game roosters. The munificus in every case are the draining of as much defective blood as is to be replaced by the more perfect material. Of course such ideas are merely silly notions, and in no case can transfusion of blood do any good, except when a temporary relief is needed in a few instances.

It should be remembered that all blood is always being consumed, and new blood is continually being manufactured in the system, from the digestive which the food eaten is first transformed. In this strange manufacturing process the whole digestive apparatus, with the lungs and liver, and even the kidneys, have important parts; and if these organs act medicinally, the blood is defective and transfusion can only effect a temporary correction, because, as soon as the transfused blood has been consumed by the continual wants of this system, it is again replaced by blood identical to that manufactured by the defective organs which produced the original defective fluid.

Blood is a constantly and absolutely necessary fluid in the economy of any animal with a circulation, but this does not mean that it has a constantly unchanged nature. On the contrary, it is the universal material which is to furnish to every organ all the materials needed to replace the continual waste, of muscular tissue or fleshy fiber to the muscles, nervous matter to the brain and nerves, plasmatic gelatine to the bones, etc. Blood is therefore continually in the torrent of its circulation to the most remote parts of the body, being deprived of the most important constituents which it carries; and without an equally continued supply of these constituents it is soon unfit for further use in repairing the bodily waste. It is thus seen that the cause or poor or diseased blood is not to be looked for in the blood per se, but in the organs of which the function is blood-making, and if these are defective, no transfusion can possibly be more than a transient benefit, and the attention of the rational physician should be directed to the defective organs in question and not to their result.—Scientific American.

A Buddhist Island.

The Island of Pooto, off the China coast, is entirely inhabitist by Buddhists. As it is a law of Bobhism that the animal life shall in no case be destroyed, neither deah nor fish is consumed upon the Island, nor are they suffered to be landed on its shores. Everywhere within its precincts temples occupy the most beautiful sites, and shrines are built by the wayside, while images of Buddha are cut upon the face of the rocks. A traveler who has recently visited the spot states that few graves are to be seen, and that the dead are probably subjected to cremation. Near the largest temple was a furnace, consisting of a small room in the hill-side, arched above, and with an excavation in the rocky floor for the fuel, or to create a draught. The process of cremation was thus described by a priest: "Three days after death, the body, seated cross-legged, and inclosed in a box, is taken to the furnace. Fuel is placed around it, and, after a suitable religious ceremony, the torch is applied, and the whole pile is soon wrapped in flame. It requires several hours and 400 pounds of wood to complete the process."

The Fish-Torpedo.

While the experiments with the monster torpedo gun are proceeding at Spezzia, other trials, not less interesting to naval men, on the subject of torpedoes, have been going on at Fiume, on the other side of the Italian peninsula. Mr. Whitehead, the inventor of the well-known fish-torpedo, has been undertaking a series of experiments in the Bay of Fiume, for the purpose of demonstrating the attacking power of his submarine instrument, and invited our Government, among others, to send representatives to the spot. Already the inventor has made the torpedo a very efficient war instrument, and he is now engaged, it seems, in improving it still more. The disturbance, as our readers are aware, is simply like a cigar, and is produced by screws acted upon by compressed air stored up within under very great pressure. The machine is usually projected about a foot below, and the head it carries a charge of dynamite or gun cotton, which explodes on striking any obstacle. These machines, although calculated to do a vast amount of damage, from the circumstance that they may be aimed with considerable certainty, and are projected at a velocity of 17 miles an hour, some distance at a rate of eight or ten miles an hour, are to be warded off, it is found, by investing the vessel attacked with a gauze or fringe of strong network. Such a protection has proved quite sufficient to arrest the progress of the monster and to explode it without effect, the cushion of water intervening between the torpedo and the sides of the vessel saving the latter from any serious consequences. The advocates of torpedo warfare are, however, suggesting about increasing the size and swiftness of the "internal machine" to such an extent as to render any improvised protection of the above nature useless; and it was to witness the perfection to which he has now brought his machine engine, that Mr. Whitehead invited most of the European Governments to send officers to Fiume to see the experiments made under his auspices. The fish-torpedo is undoubtedly a most effective naval weapon, and as it is moreover the only attacking torpedo which can be projected against an object at a certain distance. In this strange manufacturing process, the whole digestive apparatus, with the lungs and liver, and even the kidneys, have important parts; and if these organs act medicinally, the blood is defective and transfusion can only effect a temporary correction, because, as soon as the transfused blood has been consumed by the continual wants of this system, it is again replaced by blood identical to that manufactured by the defective organs which produced the original defective fluid.

SAFE

"He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Psa. xci. 1.

Safe in the sacred place,
Protected by Thy grace,
What I abide,
Under Thy hovering wing,
I will sit merry sing,
Tho' foes and sorrows rise around,
Thou dost me hide.

Arrow may fly without,
Darkness be round about,
Famine destroy,
Only mine eyes shall see,
No harm shall come nigh me,
Thou will my fortress be,
My great high tower.

To Thee I lift mine eye,
Thou will me sit on high
By Thy great power,
Buried are my sagel hands,
Walking Thy least commands;
They bear me in their hands
In perfect hour.

Thousands around may fall,
But I on Thee shall dwell
Thou will be hear,
I shall see my reward,
Then will shine me
From trouble and me free
From foe and fear.

More Abundantly.

"I am afraid I did not pray aright" is a confession we have met that foreboding in Christian experience. And there seems to be some ground for it. We come to the temple of prayer, and on the portal we find inscribed the words: "Ye know not what to pray for as ye ought." It is at first discouraging to there from a court enquette that must be observed by all petitioners? And who, like one who tries to get a hall through Congress, "knows the way," or expect only failures? Does not long his grace under a compulsion talk, and give it only to those who can spell out the key aright?

Oh no! There is another and better way to interpret this declaration.

A young man marries the daughter of a millionaire. He stands in awe of his father-in-law. He knows him but little. He is in business for himself. Difficulties beset him. He is pressed on every side. He bears the burden through many days and sleepless nights, just as he can. At the last length he borrows courage of despair, he goes to his father-in-law with trembling lips and timorous heart. He tells his story. He says, "Father-in-law," he says, "you do not know me. You do not know how to ask me for favors, nor I how to ask for favors. But I am bound to my home. I owe my business. I owe my wife. I owe my children. I owe my God. I am in trouble. I am in debt. I am in danger. I am in distress. I am in need. I am in want. I am in poverty. I am in misery. I am in ruin. I am in despair. I am in hell. I am in the grave. I am in the dust. I am in the dirt. I am in the mud. I am in the slime. I am in the filth. I am in the muck. I am in the mire. I am in the quicksand. I am in the quagmire. I am in the swamp. I am in the bog. I am in the fen. I am in the marsh. I am in the morass

AT HOME.

ON the 29th ult., Hampton, of South Carolina, sent letters to Governors Hoyt and Rogers, inclosing a copy of Hampton's recent inaugural as governor, and declaring that profound peace prevailed throughout his State. He announced his intention of relying for his vindication upon the proper legal tribunals of the State and country.

ITEMS in Bourbonese was duly handed Governor Cornell of New York on the last assessment to Gov. Tilden.

ON the night of the 11th ult., the ship Cumbria went ashore off Bridgehampton on the south shore of Long Island, and the crew and officers being all saved, but thirty-four employes of the Guest Wrecking Company were on the vessel and were on the afternoon of the 26th ult., when a severe gale came up. At about half past four on the morning of the 27th the vessel, which were of iron grew way, and the doomed men lashed to them were carried to the bottom of the sea, twenty-eight or twenty-nine of them living through the night. Forty-two, the only survivors of the crew, were washed ashore in the morning, more dead than alive.

AUDITOR A. WOODWARD, ex-Assistant Clerk of the New York Board of Supervisors and confidential clerk to Wm M. Tweed, was arrested on a charge of immediately agreeing to answer to indictments for forgery and embezzlement, was, on the 26th ult., discharged from custody on his own recognizance. He handed over to the District Attorney a number of important documents to be used as evidence in the forthcoming trial of Tweed, and transmitted to the city and county of New York property worth $100,000 beside $50,000 more in the possession of Tweed's wife. He will testify for the people in the civil suits against Tweed and others.

THE supreme court of Florida decided on the 2d, that the proper third to the Board of Canvassers, on the 27th, was not such a majesty as the legislature can impeach, or the Court could compel, but entered a peremptory order for the immediate canvass of the vote for Governor and that was done on the day after the order. Such canvass was accordingly made, and the Court adjourned to give counsel the reason an opportunity to appear and argue it.

He did not appear. A new arrangement was made, and the 31 was fixed upon for the ceremony. Again the groom failed to appear. Miss May waited a long time for him to come. Fred May found Bennett just as he was coming out of the Union Club House, drew a raw title and struck him three blows across the face and forehead. The parties then separated. Telegrams of the 4th say Bennett had challenged May to fight a duel.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A Columbia dispatch of the 2d says Vale Hampton had issued an address calling upon all faithful, law abiding and loyal citizens who desire to assist in the government of their choice, to come forward and pay ten per cent. of the amount of taxes paid by them last year. He says: "It is for the people of South Carolina now to determine whether they will support the government as they have installed, or the attempted usurpation which was upheld by the bayonets of Federal power. I am not a representative of the people of the State, and to their decision shall bow with profound respect. As long as they choose to support me as the duly elected Governor, I shall maintain the position, and, if supported by them, feel safe in assuring them that their rights will soon be firmly established and fully recognized."

LOUISIANA.

WHEN the hour arrived for the meeting of the Louisiana Legislature, on the 1st, the State House was found to be guarded by United States troops and accompanied by a battalion of State police. The Democratic members, accompanied by about 200 persons, were admitted without question. The officer on duty replied that the members could enter, but the crowd could not. Col. Bush, the speaker-man, then called upon Capt. Trescott to clear the obstructions, the barricades, police, etc., which prevented ingressed members. A national demand was then made by Treasurer upon Gen Badger and other officials for their removal, which, being declined, Col. Bush read the following protest, and retired:

We, the Democratic-conservative members of the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, presenting ourselves at the doors of the State House for the purpose of repairing to the hall of the House of Representatives, have been refused admittance by a military force consisting of United States troops and metropolitan police, having full control of said building, on the order of the President of the United States, Executive of this State. The right claimed to such of the members as have not been in the habit of attending sessions of the State, although they should not be recognized as the representatives of election, could, in the absence of the members who have been seats in the body and to the public record of the State, and thereby have been practically forfeited as in time of war, notwithstanding the patent fact of peace and quiet which was proceeding in the State and in this community. We therefore protest most solemnly, and for ourselves, against the invasion to the Executive of the right of judging of the qualifications, returns and elections of members of the House, and against the usurpation of the State House by armed police and military, and against the forcible occupation of the State-House by United States troops, and against the exercise of such powers by the Executive of this State. The right claimed to such of the members as have not been in the habit of attending sessions of the State, although they should not be recognized as the representatives of election, could, in the absence of the members who have been seats in the body and to the public record of the State, and thereby have been practically forfeited as in time of war, notwithstanding the patent fact of peace and quiet which was proceeding in the State and in this community. We therefore protest most solemnly, and for ourselves, against the invasion to the Executive of the right of judging of the qualifications, returns and elections of members of the House, and against the usurpation of the State-House by armed police and military, and against the forcible occupation of the State-House by United States troops, and against the exercise of such powers by the Executive of this State.

In receiving this protest I have just time a few words to say as chief magistrate and representative of the people of the State, to the executive of sound discretion, and in the full discharge of my duty under the constitution of the General Assembly being now convened with the whole and full power to have thought best to authorize and attend the State House a portion of the troops of the State police, and directed that the lower part of the building as well as the upper part of the office of the State Treasurer, Auditor and other officers should be made easily accessible to agents of glass doors and windows coming into the building, which shall be secured. I have no other means in the power of the executive to prevent the peace of no member of either house, and no attack of other house, as alleged in a protest in such way. As to the passage way to the Senate chamber, communicating with the building in a manner, and as to the 9th military district, I am informed that there are no United States troops are stationed, I beg to state, that there are no United States troops in the building, and I sincerely trust there will never be any occasion for requisitioning upon the troops for assistance in any manner to aid the State authorities.

The peace and dignity of the State must be maintained by the State authorities, and I am informed that the Executive has established a court for the trial of contested election. Personal clashes was referred to the action of no State House during the recess of the General Assembly.

The Clerk subsequently made a similar demand of the Governor, and declined to accept the keys proffered by Gov. Kellogg, whereupon Kellogg ordered a door broken open.

LOUISIANA.

The investigations were continued before both committees and some of the sub-committees, on the 30th ult; the testimony being presented to the 31st and is mostly given on both sides. The Rev Edwin Moore and H. W. Burrell sell, before the Returning Board, that they were induced to burn Republican ballots, and that for the intercession of Gov. Nicholls, knew of Judge Dibble instructing registrars to write Republican ballots and to collect the votes of the State on the day of the election, and that the Rev. Mr. Moore, Abraham Williams, aged sixty, said he had been offered money to vote the same ballot, as he had been taken out of bed and

Before the Senate Committee, on the 31, several colored witnesses testified to intimidation, and during March and the Democratic ticket. That Dibble stated that the number of votes cast would be given to him that they had been given from home to vote for Nicholls. Other colored witnesses testified to similar facts. David Fanks testified to his house being fired into and that he believed it was done by negroes, at the instigation of a Republican. He also wanted to invite the whites to violence to get up a bloody affair story that he had heard mutual assistance to induce negroes to vote the Democratic ticket. Fanks also wanted to, but feared the radical intimidation of the colored race. He also testified that he lived with Capt. George Phillips and that the night Phillips was shot at his house, a negro by Young were at home, as the shots were fired and that their horses and the key in his pocket. Before the House Committee, Wash H. Young was sick and owned men testified as to the intimidation of colored voters by Republicans. Other witnesses gave similar testimony given in the Senate Committee, which is over report. There were no military, property speaking, in the State House. On the preceding day there was a force of police armed not differently from the way in which they were ordinarily armed. As conservators of the peace, they were especially instructed not to interfere with any members of the legislature, but to protect them from interference from others. There were no United States troops in the State House. It was not true that any passage-way had been cut from the State House to an adjoining building to facilitate the bringing of troops into the building. Whatever communication existed had existed a long time. As to the House which this committee claimed had been hostilely and properly organized, the law provided that the secretary of State should furnish the clerk with a list of members elected. That list was furnished the Clerk Sixty-eight of the members whose names were in that list appeared in the House, and sixty-two or forty-three at most, appeared in St. Patrick's. He must decline to receive any communication from those bodies which lacks much resemblance to a quorum.

The Republican Legislature, under suppression of the rules, on the 31, passed a bill reorganizing the State Militia and appropriating $200,000 therefor.

In the Democratic Legislature, on the 4th, a communication was received from Thomas Adams, President of the Citizens' Committee, notifying the presiding officers of the House and Senate that their orders on Wm Black, Treasurer, for any amount of money they might require, to the extent of his receipts, would be promptly paid.

CONGRESSIONAL.

ON the 29th, a telegram was read in the Senate from Mr. Logan, stating that it would not be able to return to Washington from the seat of the Committee in the case Means for the Count of the Electoral Vote etc., and asking to be excused from further service and consideration. The request was granted, and Mr. Conkling was appointed to fill the vacancy. The bill was presented from Wade Hampton, Wm R. Simpson, Wm H. Wallace and Martin Gary, the Democratic Representatives in the South Carolina Legislature, stating at length the events which have recently transpired in that State, and asking Congress to take such action as will secure a cessation of the present revolutionary attitude of affairs in the State, and enable the Governor and Legislature to exercise the powers conferred upon them by the Constitution and laws of the State. Referred.

The Senate Committee, on the 31, examined Robert Wilson in reference to the appointment of topics Democratic Electors and Walter Weed, of Omaddis, charged with numerous acts of violence, witness said their chief object was to guard against the burning of the polls. A Burke, member of the House of Representatives, was present when Patrick Ireland said to him (witness) that "if the Democratic Electors were elected they would be hanged by the Republicans, and that he (Ireland) would be taken from him by force." Witness replied that he would come to Washington as messenger of the Democratic College. He stated that he received $3000 for expenses, and the money was furnished him by Ireland. He was assaulted, however, in subscription among the Democratic Electors. Witness a man named Patrick, who lives at Omaddis. Patrick had said to him (witness) that "if the Democratic Electors were elected they would be hanged by the Republicans, and that he (Patrick

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

[From our own Correspondent.]

TO THE EDITOR OF SENTINEL.

New York, Jan. 5, 1877.

1877 came down to us in a snow drift and we are still busy trying to shovel him out and see what he looks like. I don't remember seeing New York so cuggum-up with the fussy nuisance since the winter of 1872-73 when we were caught in it even worse than now. This time is bad enough, however, for the usual January thaw declines to hurry itself about clearing the streets, and the municipal aid in this direction promised last week has thus far proved to be a delusion and a snare. It is a great pity that the weather bureau won't select this month to swap off a few of its days with next July's. Such changes would be a blessing, if not quite lawful.

Our life insurance companies continue, but are now going to be pushed forward to the speediest possible end, the New York bogie of insurance having arisen, to-record his mutation of ejaculating every life insurance company in the State. This is a move in the right direction, and will, if it may result in the extinction of more weak companies, it will also re-establish confidence in the strong.

A number are already ready to cross off reputation to try and to produce a panic, and the natural confusion that on account of the absence of responsible report or worth in such institutions at this kind would afford, the last few months have shown, gives them some interest to work on. But the bottom has not fallen out yet. There are several companies left in New York almost whose permanent stability may not be questioned. The old "Equitable" for instance, with its assured forty millions of dollars and fifty and hence and its current earnings nearly is one of the safest as it is one of the largest companies in the world. Of course in the case of this and the few similar institutions the effects of the slumping can have no serious effect, but they are still greatly to be deprecated, and it is well that the action of the superintendent is calculated to set the matter at rest.

That model journalist and exemplary young man, Mr. James Gordon Bennett, of the New York Herald, is a party to one of the large sensations of the week. As has been widely announced through the press of the country Mr. Bennett has been for some time engaged to be married to a Miss May of Baltimore, but on account of the pressing affairs and bad behavior generally the wedding has been once or twice postponed. Last week the father of the bride expressed over to the eminently sensible conviction that all the wealth of the profligate millions are would be a poor compensation for his daughter's future unhappiness, and wrote Mr. Bennett that the latter must be broken off. So end Romeo exactly what the latter's course was after receiving this dismissal. It is admissible, however, to reason from precedent, it is highly probable that he might refuge from his sorrows in the cup that inebriates, and was perhaps grateful for the discretion which, for its influence. At all events he managed to insure the righteous indignation of the young lady's brother, Mr. Frederic May, who on Wednesday morning presented a pugilistic card with for the hero of the Polo Club in a manner that slightly damaged the latter's person and greatly damaged his dignity. The particulars of the affair are the source of more surmise as nobody in particular of the facts will disclose them. What the ultimate result of the affair will be is yet unknown. There are all sorts of well rumors, of duels and gore, but nothing comes of it yet. It seems certain, however, that Mr. Bennett has left town, but for what destination or for how long, is not known at this writing.

It is not every nation that can bury a citizen worth fifty millions more or less, every year for three years, but upon the passing away of Commodore Vanderbilt, America accomplishes the marvelous feat. Astor in 1875, Stewart in 1876, and now the only remaining compeer of that princely pair. Mr. Vanderbilt's death, which occurred a few minutes before eleven on the morning of the fourth, was the parting of a thread which for a middle of over four score years had worn thin and slender, and as might have been expected, was entirely painless. His families were preserved almost to the end, and the conversation with his relatives and pastor was continued almost to the last moment. This conversation was mostly of a religious nature the invalid having with his characteristic business promptness arranged every detail of business connected with his enormous estate many months since.

His wishes regarding interment were also clearly expressed and were singularly opposed to display of any kind. No flowers were to be permitted, no eulogy to be spoken over his remains, and while some unobtrusive token of his decease was permitted to be displayed at the stations along the line of his railroads he expressly forbade all draping of locomotives or cars, and all ostentatious signs that the greatest railroad monarch of the world had passed out of it.

The effect upon the stock market of this occurrence was pretty well discounted by the false report of October of which I wrote at the time, and this, together with the gradual transfer of management of his roads during his last sickness, robbed his death of most of its danger to the street. In fact, New York Central stock instead of dropping at the news, steadily advanced throughout the day.

The press biographies of Mr. Vanderbilt which came out on Friday morning from the pigeon holes where they have long rested in dusty expectation, are very interesting reading. They are the records of an eventful and phenomenally successful life; of a career purely American in every phase. It is exciting a story, however, and also too well known in its general outline to be even touched here. The amount of his property is expected to reach $50,000,000.

THE

Detroit Tribune,

FOR 1877.

THE REPRESENTATIVE

Michigan Newspaper.

ESTABLISHED:
THE WEEKLY IN 1later,
THE DAILY IN 1835.

The close of one of the most exciting and hardly-fought political contests known to recent American history finds the Republican party victorious, but under such circumstances, and with such a close result as to call upon it imperatively for the exercise of the greatest circumspection, the highest wisdom, the most sagacious foresight, and the broadest statesmanship. The chosen leaders of the people with such that has occurred its administration is impossible. Their duty is for a genuine Reform, and it will brook no further evasion or delay. The sensible condition of the Southern States, the joint result of ignorant and vain on the one hand and bitter and grasping hatred of the equality of all men before the law on the other, demands some adequate remedy which cannot long be withheld with safety. The prostrate business energies of the country must be restored by some stimulus that shall give employment to idle capital. The problem of readjusting our financial system to the changed condition of the times presses for some comprehensive, just and safe solution. The use of governmental power for the chief, or even largest incidental, promotion of private ends has met with popular condemnation, and must cease.

It is under such circumstances as these that the mantle of rule is once more placed in Republican hands. The high trust is coupled with confidence that must be fulfilled or the certain loss of all that has been gained is only a question of brief time.

THE DETROIT TRIBUNE is one of those that believe that these requests made upon the Republican Party in the purity of its first principles can and must be met. It believes that a vital power in the faith that gave it existence from every constituency can be aroused to the exertion which has labored seriously, though with little effect as yet, to restore our all means to a normal and healthy condition that this party is competent to conduct the affairs of our great nation on terms of honor, and is summoned by a spirit of humanity and justice that seeks the well-being of all classes and conditions in the community.

THE TRIBUNE will therefore give its energies and its influence in the effort to still advancing Republican principles and upholding the Republican organization as long as it shall continue all respecting maintenance of its cherished ends in that direction the path plainly marked out by patriotic duty. It will strive to give a broad and intelligent view of political affairs, and will place before its readers the most complete and the earliest information obtainable from all and extensive sources. We intend that its regular daily and weekly compendium of political intelligence shall be all the fullest in point of excellence and freshness in point of time. In short, THE TRIBUNE'S readers will be kept fully abreast with the ever moving current of events.

As to GENERAL NEWS in all its various departments, we propose to furnish a variety that shall meet all needs, and tastes, and make THE TRIBUNE a welcome visitor in every office, counting room, workshop and manufactory, and a welcome friend at every fireside. The collection of MICHIGAN NEWS by a large corps of paid correspondents, by means of telegraph and mail, we intend shall receive a greater amount and more careful attention than ever before. Our AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT will continue to completely occupy all of these, and from a feature of the paper that will be worth many times its cost to the great Agricultural interest of the State. Our MARKET REPORTS will be as they always have been, prepared with great care, and to render them complete and reliable as the movements and prices of all the great staples of trade in which the people of Michigan are interested. Our LITERARY columns will contain the best stories and choicest poetry that can be gleaned in a very wide range of selections, while our minor items will cover every variety of topic, supplying instruction and entertainment.

Thus we shall aim to make THE DETROIT TRIBUNE DURING 1877 more complete in all its departments and more valuable in its contents, than ever before, and thus continue to win its way over growing competitors by steady and attached supporters and friends, to whose welfare and wishes it shall in our pleasure be a minister.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful INVIGORANT that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent, and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, during our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment a purgative of action is a powerful reflexing agent there viscera organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for this purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will promptly remove the foul accumulations, correct the disordered secretions, restore the healthful digestion, and by their gentle influence on the nervous system, overcome that nervousness and sleeplessness so distressing to the patient.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all the fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms are the offspring of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Tumors, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Sore Eyes, Inflammations, Indolent, Inveterate, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons employed in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ringworms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuge, no anthelmintic will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display unequaled and immediate influence.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

THE NEW "DOMESTIC"

A Double-Thread Lock-Stitch Machine.

PHYSICIANS RECOMMEND IT as a medicine. It sews with great facility the lightest and finest as well as the heaviest and coarsest fabrics.

It runs much easier, lighter, and with less noise than any other machine. It is warranted as to quality of work and durability, and any machine can be returned within one year if not satisfactory.

THE LIGHTEST-RUNNING MACHINE IN THE WORLD.

With our printed directions, no instruction or mechanical skill is required to operate it. The construction of the machine is based upon principles of science and verified by long experience, simple lesser working upon centres. The bearings are few, and they are hardened and polished.

The machines are made at our new works in the city of Newark, N. J., with new special machinery, and tools, constructed expressly to accomplish what we now offer.

Every machine fully warranted.

ABOUT TELEGRAPHY.

The history of telegraphy sparkles with rare anecdotes, and one can seldom pass an hour or two more entertainingly than in connection with some intelligent electrician or telegraph expert, provided that you have a liking for hearing a story—and a minority of them have, for a killer set of dogs that were some sighhing manipulators it cannot be difficult to find. The ways are so simply divide into two parts—one of which pertains to the theory of transmission per se, and the other to belong to the method of transmission. From whatever point we contemplate this sphinx, one are confronted with marvels, and if you have any curiosity at all in such a line the subject will be difficult to make dull.

The rapidity and achievements of the telegraph are so well understood to need no explanation of human nature [illegible] as any other product of the genius of science, and each succeeding year and hour that the [illegible] adds wonders are [illegible] to dispersed with.
